More than 600 women will be selected for public company boards in the state of California by the end of 2021. Our Sacramento event will focus on SB 826, passed in 2018, the first law in the country to require more women of all racial backgrounds to be selected for corporate boards. We invite everyone to be part of the conversation to discuss why gender balance and diversity matters, and the impact we can make to advance more women to corporate boards.

The Sacramento Conversation will focus on the business benefits of having women directors on boards, the overflowing pipeline of qualified women as potential candidates, and the numbers of companies that still need to add more women to comply. This is a business issue to support the California economy and benefit the shareholders, employees and customers of the corporations in the state.
