August 2019 Featured Travel Special Galápagos Islands

ABOUT THE DESTINATION

The Galápagos Islands, in Ecuador, offer wildlife and landscapes found nowhere else on earth. A series of volcanic eruptions formed the Galápagos archipelago, a chain of 19 islands and dozens of islets. Located in the Pacific Ocean roughly 600 miles off the coast of Ecuador, the Galápagos Islands existed mostly untouched for millions of years as plants and animals found their way there and thrived.

The most famous early visitor was Charles Darwin, a young naturalist who spent 19 days studying the flora and fauna of the Galápagos in 1835. In 1859, Darwin's On the Origin of Species was published, which introduced his theory of evolution—and the Galápagos Islands—to the world.

The fame of these islands has steadily grown since then. The archipelago became Ecuador's first national park in 1959, and the Galápagos were named a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1978. Today, more than 200,000 people visit the Galápagos every year to see the animals and landscapes that are unique to this region.

The Galápagos Islands routinely exceed expectations. It's a place where lizards swim, birds walk, and humans don't take center stage.
