The museum building consists of a three-level base building that is closed to the public and provides staff workspace and storage areas. The five public, two-story towers on the base are called the North, East, South, West, and Exhibition Pavilions. The Exhibitions Pavilion serves as the temporary home for traveling art collections and the Foundation's artwork that the permanent pavilions lack room for. The permanent collection is displayed throughout the other four pavilions chronologically: the north houses the oldest art, while the west houses the newest, both of which offer views of the surrounding hillsides and central plaza.
