

The Employer Advisory Centre has been positioned as an independent resource designed to support employers in Saskatchewan as they navigate the compensation system. The services offered through the center will include and also expand upon supports previously provided through the WCB's Employer Resource Centre functions that had been supported through the prevention and employer services departments.

Independent body: The Employer Advisory Centre will be positioned to function more independently of the WCB. The EAC will act as go-to resources for answering questions, providing support materials, offering advice and connecting employers with the right information and contacts.

Support for appeals process: A key new service offering of the center is that it will offer expertise and advice to employers as they consider the appeals process. The center will work to simplify the appeals process by providing hands-on support when employers disagree with a decision. The Employer Advisory Centre is set to provide assistance to help identify and investigate appealable issues, including preparing for an appeal. The center will not, however, represent at the Board Appeal Tribunal.

The new features of the Employer Advisory Centre resulted from recommendations made by the Committee of Review (COR) and we are pleased to implement these recommendations on behalf of employers. The new centre aligns with the supports offered by the Injured Worker Appeal Services (IWAS) offered by the Ministry of Labour Relations and Workplace Safety. Unlike IWAS, the new centre does not directly involve itself in appeal hearings.

You may also want to discuss the claim with the Fair Practices Office for a neutral, impartial and independent review, report suspected Fraud or Abuse, or file an Appeal to be reviewed at the Board level.

The claim may also be eligible for cost relief if there is a pre-existing condition delaying the claim. This would be discussed with the Customer Care Facilitator.
