your motivation for public service at this time; any past or current community involvement; the most important perspectives, priorities, or skillsets you bring to the role and what you see as the greatest challenges and opportunities facing the City and District 7.

empowering people and progress. Living, working, and parenting in Columbus, I see the city's potential when we enable inclusive growth, innovative solutions, and empower citizens through education and awareness to actively shape their community's future. My experience leading initiatives including the Create Columbus Commission and chronicling the city on the Confluence Cast demonstrates my dedication to engaging with Columbusites and fostering transparency in public work. I love showcasing Columbus and its people.

I bring a results-oriented approach, shaped by years of bridging gaps between diverse communities, organizations, and perspectives. My expertise in piloting and quantifying actionable initiatives—rather than merely ideating on what might be—ensures swift, meaningful impact. For example, I created ColumbusDistricts.com to educate residents about the transition to Residential Districts, promoting transparency and civic engagement.

District Seven is a microcosm of our city, reflecting its economic and racial diversity more than any other district. Like the city as a whole, stark disparities are evident within the district, with pockets of vulnerability, crime, and need. To address these challenges, we must focus on accountable and inclusive solutions. As a council member, I will prioritize public infrastructure, civic participation, and data transparency to empower residents and stakeholders to actively shape their community.

By building partnerships, advancing equity, and maintaining transparent communication, I aim to transform challenges into opportunities for collaboration and innovation. Together, we can ensure all of Columbus becomes a model for actionable change and inclusive growth.
