Q&A with BOMA Vice Chair Glenn Good

Please share some of your priorities as BOMA International Vice Chair.

Making sure we're listening to our members and providing them the value they expect from their membership are top priorities. Collaborating with other officers, Executive Committee board members and BOMA Association Executives (BAEs) is key in this effort.

Another goal is identifying future association leaders. We need to identify those members who will lead our great organization to new heights. We also must attract new vendors/service providers and non-dues financial sources to ensure that BOMA has the resources to fulfill its mission and focus areas of the association's strategic plan.

I also chair the BOMA International Workforce Development Committee. As you're probably aware, the commercial real estate industry is at a critical juncture in terms of talent. Experienced professionals are reaching retirement age, new skill sets are required, and there is a lack of qualified workers to fill available positions. This crisis is impacting our industry's productivity and economic stability.

This committee is tasked with increasing the available workforce and talent pipeline by attracting and developing emerging professionals and by supporting a vibrant and diverse workforce that reflects the communities where we live and work.

I'm confident that we will find innovative solutions for this issue. To help us, we are enlisting representatives from the Diversity, Equity & Inclusion, Emerging Professionals, Workforce Advocacy, BOMA Fellows Leadership Academy, Membership Development, and BAE Council Committees. I welcome your ideas for meeting this challenge.

You also serve as President of the BOMA Pacific Southwest Region. What do you see as the vital role of regional BOMAs?

The regions are the "boots on the ground." They connect numerous location associations to collaborate on initiatives that provide value to our members while also serving as a crucial link between local BOMA associations and BOMA International. Regions also serve as a source of leadership, showcasing and developing individuals for future opportunities at the international level.

What is a passion nobody knows about?

I love Sherlock Holmes. I had a high school teacher who encouraged me to read one of his stories: "A Study in Scarlet." I fell in love with Holmes' characters, and I have a leather-bound collection of all his stories.

How do you enjoy spending leisure time?

I enjoy making homemade pastries. Over 15 years ago, I went to a week-long baking school, La Cuisine Paris, where I learned to make baguettes, pain de mie and croissants.

I love physical fitness, and if I'm not training for a marathon, I'm lifting weights. Taking care of myself physically and mentally is the most important thing I can do. Health is wealth!

I'm active in my community. I believe it's important to give back. I have participated in AIDS Walk San Francisco for 10 years, raising funds for those folks who are no longer with us, those who have overcome odds to live, and to support for those facing challenges of HIV stigma.

Traveling is my passion. I'm fortunate to have travelled worldwide. It's exposed me to new people, ways of thinking and beautiful sights.

What would be your ideal Sunday?

Wake up and begin making bread. Then working out followed by a big breakfast. Read for 1-2 hours before I walk to Thorough Bread Pastries on Church Street, where I get a croissant, a cup of coffee, and chat with the staff about life. I love to stay busy, so I meet a couple of friends for coffee, and then finish making bread. Before dinner, I walk to Kite Hill in Eureka Valley. It's a beautiful venue that has great views. It helps me appreciate what I have and the city's beauty.
