

- No private offices. Even the CEO sits in the open-plan to promote approachability.
- 65% resident workstations with low barriers to promote open collaboration.
- 35% mixed settings to promote and encourage movement and migration during the workday.

In SKG, Credit Human found a company that could meaningfully turn insight into action to promote collaboration, health, and wellness and support the whole worker with synergized solutions. SKG's space to work mentality focuses on the whole person, uniquely positioning them to help Credit Human create thriving, comfortable and supportive environments for their employees.

Greatness happens when people put their heads together. To keep up with the demands of a hybrid workforce, synergy and energy should transcend time and space. Mary and the SKG design team knows this better than anyone. For the Credit Human project, SKG worked closely with Kirksey's lead designers to create connected environments to make people feel right at home at work. With ancillary furnishings, they leveraged a constellation of award-winning manufacturers to breathe life into shared spaces and unique settings designed to advance Credit Human's people-first culture. Each vignette and setting has a one-of-a-kind style requiring extremely detailed collaboration across the design teams.

Mary and the design team at SKG are privileged to work with some of the best in business. The Credit Human project is integration at its finest.
