

Thomas Wolfe ❖ M E M O R I A L ❖

Thomas Wolfe never lacked people interested in his larger-than-life persona. But the one thing that all writers need, Thomas Wolfe included, is readers. If you've ever been interested in reading more of Thomas Wolfe's writings, now is the perfect opportunity to dip into his work by reading some of his short stories. Beginning in January of 2018 and continuing through April, a monthly Thomas Wolfe Book Club will meet in downtown Asheville at the Thomas Wolfe Memorial State Historic Site. Each month, a different local educator will lead the club in discussion of a pre-selected short story written by Thomas Wolfe. The good news is that you don't have to attend all club meetings, or even multiple meetings, to be a member. Just read any of the selected short stories, show up at the corresponding meeting, and be prepared for an informative and provocative conversation. Our text, from which all story selections will be made, is The Complete Short Stories of Thomas Wolfe, edited by Francis E. Skipp with a Foreword by James Dickey (New York: Scribner's, 1987).

See you there!
