

Stewardship Corner

A number of years ago, when I was still working, my boss turned the company over to his family. This was a huge mistake as none of them knew what was going on. They had all kind of ideas that were made to self destruct. They fought a lot, and even though I didn't agree, I had to do them. I needed my job, so I had to go along. The foreman in the plant asked me one day how I kept my focus, as he fought everything and didn't want to change. One day he asked me, how I took it, was it because I went to church and cared. He was not involved in church, and he knew it had been part of me my whole life. I hadn't thought about it much, but I said I guess so. He got mad one day and quit; I was there till I retired.

Forrest Swain