

Patricia Cole, born and raised in Indiana, spent the better part of her career in hospital nursing and eventually became the Coordinator of Health Services at Anna Maria College in Paxton MA where her husband was a professor. After raising her four children (one adopted from Vietnam), she returned to graduate school earning an MA in Religious Education and worked for 20 years at a Director of Religious Education in various parishes in Worcester County, both as an administrator and a teacher. After even more coursework she received a Certificate of Advanced Graduate Studies in Theology. She has always enjoyed the challenge of learning and teaching, working with both students and volunteers. And she is very happy to have discovered LLAIC.
