

Mark your 2025 calendar for the twelfth season of On Pettaquamscutt, Presentations on the Environment and History of the Narrow River Watershed and join us for three great Sunday afternoon talks (all starting at 1:00) at the Narragansett Library at 25 Pier Marketplace:

January 26, Kate Venturini Hardesty:
Landscape Care with Climate Change Resilience in Mind
Kate, Educator and Program Administrator at the URI Cooperative Extension, says January is a great time to plan sustainable lawn and plant care practices for the coming spring and summer.

February 23, Rebecca Kelly:
Mending Matters, Historical Perspectives on Textiles and the Environment
Rebecca, the Deputy Director and Curator at the South County Museum, will describe the environmental impact of textile production past and present.

March 30, Dr. Blaine Hymel:
Environmental Toxin Exposure in Rhode Island Wildlife
Blaine, Veterinarian at the Wildlife Clinic of Rhode Island, is a graduate of the Tufts School of Veterinary Medicine. She will talk about what can be done to alter the impact of toxins on local wildlife.

On Pettaquamscutt is a collaboration between the Friends of Canonchet Farm, Narrow River Preservation Association, South County Museum, and the Maury Loontjens Memorial Library. All talks are free and open to the public. Participants can register at the library calendar page (https://narlib.org/calendar/) to reserve a seat. Registration will open at the beginning of the month for each presentation. For more information, visit OnPettaquamscutt.org.