

Doug Lowe

about an hour ago ·

2 weeks ago I had a pretty normal morning, starting with a Bible study and pumpkin pancakes. But then, I had my first-ever seizure. My friends called an ambulance, and after tests at the hospital, they found a few tumors in my brain.

The next day, I had a biopsy done that later confirmed that it's a glioblastoma (GBM) - a type of brain cancer. I'm now scheduling chemo and radiation treatments, which will initially last about six months.

In spite of how it sounds there are lots of blessings. Imagine if I had had a seizure while riding my bike. The seizure actually helped me discover the tumor, and it's thankfully small. Plus, I recovered from the biopsy much faster than expected (I did not want to stay in the hospital longer than a few days!).

I may be surprised by all of this, but have a lot of peace in the fact that God is not, and I feel His love surrounding me. I am so grateful for all the love, support and prayers from all of those around me and ask all of you to continue to pray.

49 51 comments 2 shares

Like Comment Share