With a record influx of freshmen and full-time faculty medical issues, Coastal Carolina University in Conway, SC (just west of Myrtle Beach), in a fit of desperation, has hired me as adjunct, aka Teaching Associate. While I had hoped to simply dip my toes back into the college teaching waters, I'm teaching three classes: Interactive Journalism Intro and two sections of Principles of Journalism. (One of the other adjuncts had to pull out at the 11th hour so... First day is under my belt and no train wrecks but there sure is a big technical ramp up.

I got my master's at age 66 for precisely this reason. I did sub work in the public schools last year and enjoyed it. I guess I just don't quite have the hang of this retirement thing.

Regards,
Steve
