

Speaker Biographies

Uganda Richardson BSW, LCSW

Uganda Richardson researches and studies clinical models used for racial trauma as it relates to the African-American population. Uganda is currently studying under Dr. Joy DeGruy, in which her trauma research is the foundation of her passion. Uganda has training in assessment and intervention as it relates to African-American population. Uganda considers herself an activist, advocate, and a change-agent in conjunction with the African-American community, which she says is “her community”.

Maggie Miller, BA

Maggie Miller (She/Her/Hers) earned a Bachelor of Arts in psychology at The University of Central Oklahoma. She is in graduate school at The University of Oklahoma and will earn a Master of Social Work degree. She is in her concentration year clinical practicum at A Chance to Change. She is passionate about learning, helping others heal and supporting people in advocating for themselves. Maggie considers herself an advocate and support of marginalized communities. Maggie has a goal of doing her part to undo racism. She has a goal of working in a non-profit with an emphasis on racial trauma connected to holistic healing approach.