1.) Governor Polis delivers State of the State, Leadership shares their legislative priorities

Governor Polis opened by acknowledging the challenges Coloradans have faced between Covid-19, forcing millions of women to leave the workforce, multiple devastating fires that burned homes and businesses to the ground, and political turmoil that resulted in division within our communities. Governor Polis called upon state lawmakers to continue to put Colorado families and businesses first, and that between the resilient nature of our state and our ability to work together, the state's economy can and will be rebuilt. 3.) CAR brings forward legislation to help Coloradans overcome obstacles to homeownership

Homeownership is one of the fastest ways to build wealth, yet many Coloradans find themselves locked out. Colorado lawmakers can usher in a Century of Opportunity through:

1. Financial literacy Education - Residents should receive the education they need to achieve upward mobility. A financial literacy high school curriculum should include understanding credit, debt, and student loans as well as preparing for homeownership and retirement.
2. Credit Building Programs - Colorado should promote pilot programs that level the playing field for populations of color and give renters opportunities to build their credit so they can access homeownership.
3. Requiring Division of Housing Annual Reporting - Colorado lawmakers should pass legislation to annually get a comprehensive picture of the state's housing needs, be transparent about how we are meeting those needs, and base long-term affordable housing decision on data.

Introduced bill: HB-1028 Annual Public Report Affordable Housing (LPC Position: Support)

4. Incentivizing Best Practices in Affordable Housing Development - We should empower and reward local governments that pursue policies that increase the potential for building or developing more supply of affordable housing to meet Colorado's needs.

5.) NAR speaks to White House on Eviction Moratorium

On Thursday, February 11, NAR participated in a housing provider coalition call with the White House to discuss the CDC eviction moratorium and rental assistance challenges. During the call, coalition members discussed the challenges presented by COVID-19 for both tenants, who may be out of work or making reduced income as a result of the pandemic, and housing providers, on whom the burden falls to make mortgage payments on their property regardless of the rent they collect each month. The coalition had several specific points it made:

- The need to allow evictions for reasons other than non-payment of rent to continue to protect the health and safety of residents and workers;
- The need for access to the court system to have a neutral party, informed on the matters of law, as an arbiter of disputes and as a means of keeping communication open between property owners and residents;
- The importance of clear attestation ("self-certification") requirements for tenants claiming protection under the moratorium, making clear their responsibilities to seek rental assistance and pay owed rent, and the penalty of perjury for providing false information; and
- The need for clarity regarding how long the eviction moratorium will last, taking into consideration the economic impact as well as the public health need and balancing that length with the available assistance.

6.) NAR Urges Support for Small Businesses, Commercial Real Estate

On Thursday, February 4, the House Small Business Committee held a hearing: "The State of the Small Business Economy in the Era of COVID-19." NAR sent a letter to the Committee, thanking it for its work in support of small businesses during the pandemic, and urging continued action to provide greater relief to the commercial real estate sector.

Specifically, NAR asked for continued support for the SBA's Paycheck Protection Program and its Economic Injury Disaster Loans, emphasizing the need for them to be simple to access by small business owners and efficiently administered. In addition, NAR asked that Congress reconsider the Main Street Lending Facility, created by the CARES Act. This lending program was intended to help businesses that may qualify for PPP loans but need more assistance, or who do not meet all of the SBA program size standards but are still being impacted by the pandemic. Unfortunately, due to high minimum loan requirements and low lender participation, it has not lived up to expectations, and billions of dollars in funding for it remain unused. Reconfiguring the program so that funding gets released to the businesses that are hurting the most - and that will be so important to the economic recovery once the pandemic is over - should be a priority for Congress.
