

Cynthia Marlow Gould graduated with a Bachelor's degree from the University of Texas, has a Master's in Communication Sciences and Disorders, and is a Speech Language Pathologist and a licensed Dyslexia specialist. Cynthia has taken her skills all over the world, including cities such as Monaco, Hong Kong, Bangkok, and Gstaad. She has been the Head of Special Education, a Speech Pathologist, led professional development seminars for several international schools, co-chaired a school through its accreditation process, and has been an invited speaker at the Texas Speech and Language Association (TSHA) annual conference as well as Apraxia Kids this year. Currently, as a faculty member at Highland Park ISD, she continues to develop awareness and interventions for Speech and Language disorders, Dyslexia related issues, and help develop and support effective learning environments.

Her book Series of Hard to Pronounce Letters is not meant to replace a Speech Pathologist, rather they are books to be read for pleasure and building confidence in children and students. Each book has 'secret tips' to tackle speech disorders, and most importantly to bring smiles along the way. Speech Pathologists can use them as a teaching tool in their sessions to facilitate auditory awareness and articulation practice. The book series continues to grow in popularity with articles in publications such as Park Cities People, Preston Hollow People, Paper City Ft. Worth, University Park Life, 'Something Good' on the NBC morning show with Deborah Ferguson, and many local school district newsletters.