
Workshop for Graduate Supervisors – Supervising research across cultures

Facilitator: Dr. Nanda Dimitrov

October 23, 11:30-1:00 am, Room 202 Robert Sutherland Hall

Explore the approaches that universities in Canada, Europe, Australia and the U.S. have taken to support graduate students and supervisors who collaborate across cultures on international and interdisciplinary research teams, at the intersection of multiple cultural and disciplinary backgrounds and identities. Using case studies and research on cross-cultural supervision, participants will engage in discussion of effective strategies that supervisors can use to facilitate collaboration between supervisors and students, as well as among students on diverse research teams.

RSVP to Kristin Cliff, sgsasst@queensu.ca, by Monday October 16th. A light lunch and refreshments will be provided

Dr. Dimitrov is an educational developer and intercultural communication scholar at Western University. She explores critical issues in internationalizing higher education through an intercultural communication lens. She is the Director of the Teaching Support Centre and holds an adjunct research professor appointment in the Centre for Research on Teaching and Learning in Higher Education.
