

Tell Me the Truth About Racism

Helping you share the gift of antiracism with kids in your church or school

Tell Me the Truth About Racism is a story that frames racism through the lens of Christian faith for children aged 5-12. We, Will Bouvel and Jen Holt Enriquez, built the foundation of this work in Lent 2021 to teach to children at our churches in the Episcopal Diocese of Chicago. Soon thereafter we began training other Christian formation leaders to do this work in their own churches. The training program received a Becoming Beloved Community Grant from the Episcopal Church in July of 2021. So far we've walked alongside 21 communities across the United States and Canada so that they can bring the gift of antiracism to their children.

Our approach defines racism as “The lie in our world that some people are better than others based on the color of their skin.” It is only because of the Truth we know from God, that all people are equally children of God, that we can clearly see how racism tells us a lie about who we are. Racism distorts us all – black, white, and brown – away from who God made us to be.
