ON THE COVER

Mississippi Harvest: a testament to heritage

Mississippi Harvest, the 28-foot, 9,000 lb. bronze statue commissioned by the City of Muscatine, stands vigilant over this historic river town nestled on the banks of the Mighty Mississippi River.

This magnificent artwork, created by nationally-acclaimed sculptor Erik Blome, was installed at Riverside Park in 2006.

"In my business, you're really sensitive to personality. It's almost as much about who they're not honoring," said sculptor Erik Blome, in a Muscatine Journal article. "In this case, it's not really about honoring a famous person, it's about the heritage of Muscatine."

Mississippi Harvest was inspired by an original photograph in the collection of the Muscatine Art Center which depicts a man harvesting mussels with a clam rake. The sculpture is dedicated to those who made Muscatine the "Pearl Button Capitol of the World."

By 1898 the "Pearl City" turned out over 138 million buttons. Freshwater mussels were plentiful and wearing pearl buttons on your clothes was a sign of wealth and prosperity. The 'pearl rush' of Muscatine – a national treasure story akin to the Gold Rush in the West – was born. Clammers, pearlers, cutters and polishers by the thousands created an industry in Muscatine which stretched to the Arkansas, Ohio and Tennessee Rivers as well. By the turn of the 20th Century, Muscatine produced 1.5 billion pearl buttons a year.

Overharvesting the freshwater mussels and the invention of plastics used to manufacture buttons brought an end to Muscatine's pearl button era.

Mississippi Harvest continues to stand sentinel over today's Muscatine. Although most people call him a 'clammer' or a 'clam fisher', more accurately the rugged Muscatine man depicted in the statue is actually a pearler. He would use the clam forks to prospect for the biggest, oldest clams in the river – those mussels hosting some of the finest freshwater pearls to be found.

Created specifically to honor the Pearl Button Industry – the real 'gold-rush of the Midwest', Mississippi Harvest truly stands as a testament to the spirit of innovation and grit that gave rise to other great manufacturing companies and industries founded by Muscatine entrepreneurs.

See Mississippi Harvest up close and personal right next to (sometimes in) the Mississippi River at Muscatine's Riverside Park, 101 W Mississippi Dr. at the foot of Iowa Avenue. And for a great historical adventure, visit The National Pearl Button Museum @ The History and Industry Center at 117 W 2nd Street in Historic Downtown Muscatine.

Great River Road

The Great River Road is a collection of state and local roads that follow the course of the Mississippi River through 10 states from Ontario to the Gulf of Mexico. Developed in 1938, the road is 2,340 miles designated with a green-and-white sign showing a river steamboat inside a pilot wheel with the name of the state or province. Muscatine holds a special fondness for the Great River Road as one of our own, Charles H. Young, worked toward establishing the Great River Road and according to some, the idea for the green and white pilot wheel marker distinguishing the route is attributed to Young.

Take a moment to enjoy the view at the Mark Twain Overlook (100-198 Lombard St.) located by the entrance to the Norbert F. Beckey Bridge near downtown Muscatine. Here you can find signage dedicated to Charles H. Young's work toward establishing the Great River Road.

Norbert F. Beckey Bridge

After enjoying the beautiful river views in the daylight, be sure to take a look at the Norbert F. Beckey Bridge — the only bridge over the Mississippi River with LED lights.

Completed in December 1972, it replaced the Muscatine High Bridge, which stood from 1891-1973. A pillar from the old High Bridge still stands at Riverside Park in Muscatine. The bridge, which stretches 1,500 feet from Iowa to Rock Island County, Illinois, across the Mississippi River, is awash in a rainbow of colors and lights up the night. Mark Twain might have seen his most beautiful sunsets in Muscatine, but modern residents and visitors to this historic river town now have their own light show to enjoy.

Lock and Dam No. 16

A great place to sit and enjoy the Mississippi River, Lock and Dam No. 16 is located on the Illinois side of the Mississippi. Watch the barges pass through the channel and make sure to stop during the winter. During the spring and fall seasons, you can also find a significant number of pelicans frequenting this popular fishing hole while migrating through Iowa for the seasons. Watch from the observation deck or grab a picnic table, which are open year-round.
