Teachers and Students Caught Being Inclusive!

Students in the Walton Farm Life Skills Support and Multiple Disabilities Support classes are being included in general education to a greater extent this school year. General education teacher, Lisa Bowen-Gotwals, reports that their peers have responded with open arms and enjoy getting to know their friends better. While these students may not communicate the way their peers do, classmates learned how to best talk to their friends through assistive technology and picture cards. But don't take our word for it - check out this letter written to a friend and the illustration of him in his wheelchair at recess! Walton Farm teachers are proud of the amazing students in their school!
