Empowering excellence.

You will learn:

- ❑ General OSHA and workers' compensation responsibilities and requirements
- ❑ The principles for developing and maintaining an effective safety and health program in your workplace, including leadership commitment, employee involvement and hazard recognition
- ❑ Compliance requirements or major program areas, with additional resources listed for each area
- ❑ Resources to further knowledge and navigate safety and workers' compensation questions and concerns

After this course you will be able to:

- ❑ Recognize the many hazards in the workplace
- ❑ Develop a workplace safety and health program

Who should attend:

Individuals whose job responsibilities require them to handle safety, loss control, OSHA compliance or workers' compensation who are new to the safety field should attend. These individuals include: new business owners, labor and/or management safety committee representatives.

Attendance in this class will count towards a full credit for those employers enrolled in the Bureau of Workers' Compensation Industry Specific Safety Program (ISSP) and as an external training for safety council attendance.
