

Robert's Westside, 7321 Madison, Forest Park

$15 at the door.

Doors open at 6:30.

Show starts at 7:00.

Join us as we kick off a new season of storytelling with a great line-up of tellers.

Tracy Fowler survived 40 years of teaching, but after 6 months of retirement found herself in the right seat in a car teaching teenagers how to drive. When she's not working with kids, you can find her outside hiking in the woods, feeding squirrels in her backyard, or driving her race car.

Lou Greenwald has been promoting storytelling since his first trip to the National Storytelling Festival years ago. Now he tells his own stories. Lou says, "Storytelling is how we understand the world, as we are always telling a story to ourselves, whether we realize it or not."

Susan Rashid Horn has degrees in art and English. After retiring from teaching, she began volunteering as a refugee mentor, a reader for the blind, and a food pantry packer. Susan recently completed a memoir; currently, she is working on a novel about three generations of a family that tells stories, but keeps secrets.

Rebecca Lindell is an Evanston-based freelance writer and editor who has worked at newspapers around the Midwest as well as in higher education. After spending decades telling other people's stories, she is at long last telling some of her own.

Susan Rohde co-produces Tellers' Night. She has won four Moth StorySLAMS, participated in three Moth GrandSLAMS, and has had a story air on WBEZ's Moth Radio Hour. Susan and her husband have been licensed foster parents for 25 years.

Margaret Burk co-produces Tellers' Night. She tells throughout the Chicago area and on the national virtual stage. A special passion is teaching Sharing Your Legacy writing classes to senior adults, believing that our stories are heirlooms - gifts to future generations.