Want to reduce crime in your community?

Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design – or CPTED – is an approach to crime prevention. It uses architectural design and the intentional management of our environments to reduce crime and victimization. CPTED strategies aim to build a sense of community so residents and property managers can gain territorial control and send the clear message to criminals that they should go somewhere else!

The National Crime Prevention Council (NCPC) will facilitate this three (3) day workshop that will cover core CPTED strategies. Using the unique NCPC Community Blueprint and second generation CPTED concepts, you'll discuss and prioritize your community's specific challenges and work together to develop a basic CPTED-based action plan for your area.

You can register a community team of up to eight (8) individuals. Consider including a mix of residents, apartment managers, business owners or managers, and/or faith leaders. The right mix for your specific neighborhood is up to you. No team? No problem. You can still register, attend this training opportunity solo, and take what you learn back to your community.
