Tim Stevens
Superintendent

What is your current role and what are your main responsibilities?

I am a superintendent with Criterion General Inc.

My responsibilities include :

- Project planning, inspections, quality control and job site safety.
- Take offs and buyouts before the start of a project.
- Working with engineers and architects during the project including RFI's and change orders
- Scheduling and keeping the project on track with the deadline by directing employees and subcontractors throughout the various phases of the job.

How did you get started & what inspired you to pursue a career in construction?

I was born into a contracting family in Michigan and was raised on jobsites as far back as I can remember. Therefore, I would say construction is in my blood. I have dabbled in a few other careers, but nothing has been as satisfying as being in the field with my crew.

Can you share a project you are particularly proud of or what has been your biggest achievement in your career so far?

I would say the project that I am the proudest of would have to be the Anchor Lutheran School that was just completed. This was one the most challenging projects I have been part of. Adding a 2nd floor onto an occupied space while mitigating weather and safety concerns for the students, kept myself and crew on our toes.

My biggest achievement so far in my career is probably providing the life my career allows my family to live. Also, it's always nice to see the customers face at the end of a project.

What do you like about our company culture?

Our company is very family oriented. Criterion really backs up their employees in all matters of the work life balance.

What do you enjoy doing in your free time, hobbies, or interests outside of work that you are passionate about?

My free time usually involves spending time off grid, relaxing, and fishing.

I love being involved in my children's sports and enjoying the occasional golf trip.
