Greetings from Freeholder Director Virginia E. Haines

On behalf of the Ocean County Board of Chosen Freeholders, I welcome you to the Summer 2019 issue of Out & About Ocean County, A Free Newsguide to Arts & Heritage Events. Each summer we have the opportunity to enjoy art and heritage events as well as the treasures of our beaches and natural resources.

Ocean County's arts and history organizations provide a rich tapestry of programs, events and classes for your summer enjoyment. Many of our towns and boroughs provide wonderful outdoor concerts, including the Ocean County Department of Parks and Recreation's The Carousel of Music Concert Series to be held at various locations throughout the summer.

The New Jersey Teen Arts Festival will be held at the Ocean County College on May 29, 30 and 31. We are all grateful to the Jay and Linda Grunin Foundation for their support of this important showcase of student talent from throughout New Jersey right here at our Ocean County College.

I am pleased to report that Cedar Bridge Tavern in Barnegat Township is now open to the public.

The pages of this 2019 summer issue are graced with artwork received in response to a call for contributions from the Ocean County Artists' Guild. This is the eighth summer that we have showcased art in our summer issue from one of our Ocean County artist organizations on a rotating basis.

Please take special note of our exciting palette of summer cultural opportunities in the event listings.

New Maestro at GSP

By Victoria Ford

Leading the Garden State Philharmonic into its 63rd season of musical magic is Diane Wittry of Allentown, the orchestra's seventh conductor – and first-ever woman conductor in the organization's history.

Notably, she also holds the distinction of first woman music director in Texas, Pennsylvania and Connecticut. Just 9 percent of American orchestras have women directors, according to Wittry. She recently returned from Nevada, where she taught a women-only workshop on conducting; last May, she gave a talk in China on women's roles in music.

In the past, training was limited, she explained, and women just weren't pursuing conducting as a profession. (Nor playing, nor composing, for that matter.) Over time, interest among women has grown, and today there are more opportunities than ever. The same is true for orchestra musicians – long skewed male, orchestras are becoming more gender-balanced, especially since the advent of screened auditions.

Wittry said the two forces that drive her are love for the music and her desire to create strong arts organizations that serve the communities in which they're based. Her primary mission is to bring the music to as many people as possible, she said.

To that end, her five-year plan for the Garden State Philharmonic is all about regionalization. She calls it "a new era of exciting and engaging community outreach activities and concert programming."

In February of last year, Wittry replied to the GSP's national advertisement for a conductor, which she saw in the nick of time, the day before the deadline. She knew right away the GSP was the type of organization she wanted to be associated with. Her nine-page CV, as testament to her impressive career and numerous accolades, made her a shoo-in. She guest conducted in May and officially started in July, in advance of the 2018-19 season.

Trained in violin and viola, and named 2013's Outstanding Alumnus of the Thornton School of Music at the University of Southern California (where she earned her master's degree in 1985), Wittry brings a proven track record of inspiring musicians and building orchestras artistically and organizationally.

Maestro Diane Wittry.

It was during her junior year at Thornton that she began her conducting studies with Daniel Lewis. She received a conducting fellowship from the Aspen Music Festival. Other teachers and mentors include Michael Tilson Thomas, Sir Peter Maxwell Davies, Gustav Meier and Jorge Mester. Most recently she worked with the renowned Russian conductor Leonid Korchmar of the Kirov Opera and Jorma Panula from Finland.

She's written two books. The Pulitzer Prize-nominated Beyond the Baton: What Every Conductor Needs to Know, published in 2007, is a teaching tool – in fact, a required text in an Australian graduate program, she said. Baton Basics: Communicating Music Through Gestures, released in 2014, is also being used in conducting classes nationwide. Wittry's own musical composition, "Mist," published by the Theodore Presser Company, was premiered by the Allentown Symphony Orchestra and has been performed on stages and played on radio nationally and internationally. It is available for streaming at Amazon.com in a recording by the Slovak State Philharmonic.

As a teacher, Wittry is a frequent guest lecturer at the Juilliard School, the Manhattan School of Music, and the Curtis Institute of Music, as well as other Universities and Colleges. She is sought after as a clinician, adjudicator, and conductor for All-State Orchestras, and she leads national and international courses through various conductor's institutes, as well as Beyond the Baton Conducting Seminars and Workshops.

In addition to the Garden State Philharmonic, she conducts the Allentown Symphony (since 1996), a professional orchestra now in its 24th year, with 75 members, a $3 million budget and more than two dozen concerts a year. While there, she has established a reputation for creative programming and an innovative approach to concert formats; for her extensive knowledge and experience with orchestral repertoire; and for her advocacy for educational programs.

A frequent guest conductor of professional orchestras across the country and abroad, Wittry has worked throughout Europe and Asia, including China, Poland, Canada, Russia, Slovakia, Japan and Italy. She also served as Artistic Director of the International Cultural Exchange Program for Classical Musicians with the Sarajevo Philharmonic in Bosnia. Upcoming workshops this summer will have her teaching in the Czech Republic, Maine, and Whidbey Island, off the coast of Seattle.

Her favorite place? "Wherever I am at the moment."

She feels fortunate to get to travel and conduct in different countries – "the locations help to inform the interpretation of the music," she said. While guest conducting internationally, she often works with translators, and generally uses a lot of Italian (a universal language in music).

At the time she applied for the GSP job, she was also directing the Ridgewood Symphony Orchestra, but she wanted to be able to focus her energies in the right places, so she let go of the Ridgewood job.

She drives hours from Allentown to rehearsals in Maplewood or to meetings or performances in Toms River – but that’s not uncommon, she said, as most professional conductors lead two or three orchestras at a time, for which they’ll fly all over the country. Likewise, most professional players will play in four or five orchestras and teach privately.

If working on a concert, she prioritizes her time accordingly. There will be just three or four rehearsals before a concert, she said. The program will determine the size of the orchestra, 30 to 45, maybe 60.

The GSP season contains five concerts in the subscription series, performed at the Jay and Linda Grunin Center for the Arts, on the campus of Ocean County College; a Christmas concert (last year’s was “Messiah and More” at Christ Episcopal, featuring the GSP Chorus); “The Nutcracker” with the Atlantic City Ballet; and the outdoor Independence Day concert, plus additional community engagement concerts and chamber music ensembles of two to five, e.g. flute and guitar, percussion and piano, string quartet, brass quintet.

Concert programs are created with the help of the artistic committee, and by taking ideas from many different directions. Because she works with the regional community, musical tastes are quite varied, she said. It’s a balancing act. A favorite such as “War Horse” will drive ticket sales, but lesser-known pieces by well-known composers can also have appeal. Sure, audiences want masterpieces, but incorporating shorter, lighter pieces achieves the desired eclectic, truly transcendent, concert experience. She’ll add actors, dancers, even poetry readings. Vivaldi’s “Seasons” for example, is a series of four concertos for strings and solo violin, each evoking a different season of the year, lending itself well to additional theatrical components.

The moral of the story in Wittry’s view is, “Go deeper. Let’s make musical connections.”

As Music and Artistic Director, her “off-the-podium” time is even busier: scheduling and preparing; going over equipment lists and working through the logistics of performances; attending board meetings, development meetings, artistic committee meetings; meeting with community leaders, donors; organizing and attending fundraising events. Ticket sales cover only 30 percent of the total cost to run an orchestra. The nonprofit Philharmonic’s executive director is Alison Walter.

In her online message to audience members, Wittry says her greatest passion is bringing exciting musical concerts to audiences and through orchestral music, changing their life for the better. The Garden State Philharmonic has always been vitally important to the region, she notes. Through its professional and youth orchestras, and adult and youth choruses, “we continually strive to bring you meaningful and moving concert experiences.”

The goals she outlines are “more community interaction and a commitment to showcasing the finest musicians from throughout the tri-state area, while incorporating the energy and vitality of young musicians recently graduated from the top music programs in the United States through our new ‘Next Generation’ Orchestra program.” GSP is currently auditioning instrumentalists for the next-gen mentorship program, which pairs accomplished veteran players with musicians in the early years of their career; special performances are planned.

The location is what makes regionalization possible, she said. Proximity to New York and Philly means great conservatories within driving radius, fertile ground for partnerships and access to the best mentors and players.

“It’s such a gold mine of potential,” she said.

Regionalization will also involve making rehearsals open to the public; performing every concert twice, in order to serve the region better and to build larger audiences.

In restructuring the Garden State Philharmonic, she’s working to double the size of the board from 15 to 30, with representation from Monmouth and Ocean County.

“We need that many fingers to do the work,” she said.

Education and outreach are two other crucial aspects of keeping the music relevant, Wittry explained.

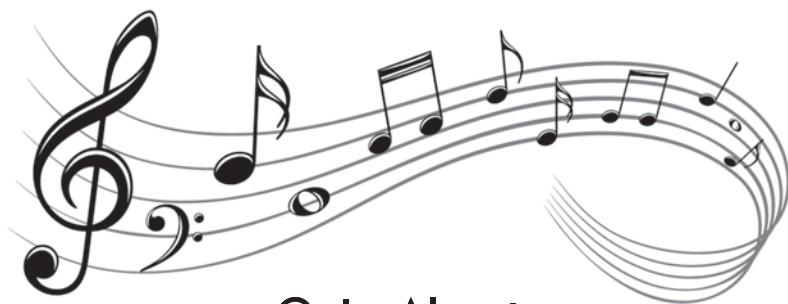

Music for Young People, sponsored by the Kiwanis, is a program that goes into schools and community settings to show young people about orchestral music, instruments, the science of sound, musical excerpts from the concert, concert behavior, and the growing list of ways they can get involved in music.

In partnership with the Ocean County Library, members of the Philharmonic and Youth Orchestra present the “Meet the Music” series of five programs, for children ages 6-12 and their families, each focusing on a different musical family of instruments – percussion, woodwind, string and brass. After each presentation, children and their families can try out the featured instruments for themselves.

A social media marketing push is another part of her strategic plan.

Having conducted as many as 150 musicians on a stage – which she described as a very, very powerful feeling, to have everyone on the same figurative and literal page – Wittry knows what it takes to get the job done. Proper hand technique. “Less talking, more working.” Leadership. Time management. Well-structured rehearsals that maximize productivity. “Tell them what you want, don’t criticize what they did.” Like a coach, hold them accountable and motivate them to perform at their highest level.

The conductor is the “central point of communication,” she said. “When you do open your mouth, the last thing you want to do is put your foot in it.”

Ocean County Artists' Guild Update

By: Victoria Ford

Leadership of Ocean County Artists' Guild.

The Ocean County Artists Guild, an Island Heights institution for 62 years, occupies a 140-year-old Victorian house on Chestnut Avenue along the Toms River.

It began in 1957 as the Ocean Arts and Crafts Club, a small group of artists doing what artists do: getting together to make art and share ideas about how to promote their work in the community. In a few short years, the group had grown from seven members to 30, staging exhibits in local hotels, banks and backyards on clotheslines. The name was changed to the Artists' Guild in 1960. They met in the First Aid Squad building until they outgrew that space, then moved around a bit until they settled for 15 years at a United Methodist church until, miraculously, in 1974, one Edith Grace deeded the house and grounds as a gift to the Guild.

On a recent spring afternoon, four ladies from the Guild's leadership team gathered to discuss the organization's traditions and goals, and to reflect on their own stories of finding a "home" at the Guild to nurture their creative passions.

The current president is AnnMarie Dario, an art therapist by profession, and a potter and painter; board member Tamara Woronczuk is a retired art teacher, mixed media artist and workshop coordinator; painter Carol Ann Oporto is a past president; and painter Mary Jo Austin is a retired art teacher and the longest-running board member.

Today the Guild's mission is much the same as ever – to serve the artists and community, to enhance the quality of life for residents, to be an outlet and training ground for artistic talent and an attraction to draw tourism.

The facility is open to the public Tuesday through Sunday afternoons, 1 to 4 p.m. Admission is free.

"This place is hopping," Woronczuk said, with different activities taking place all the time. Classes in every medium for adults and children run in four-, six- and eight-week series; workshops, demonstrations, open studio time with live models and cultural programs are available to active artists of every level. Workshops bring nationally known names, Woronczuk said: master of watercolor Charles

Reid from Connecticut, Joe Gyurcsak of Mercerville (resident artist and brand manager for Blick and Utrecht Art Supplies), Kristy Kuch from the Midwest (“the queen of colored pencil”), Tim Lynch from Illinois. They’ll attract attendees from as far away as Kansas, Arizona and California.

The Guild has tried to stay true to the fundamental art principle of “drawing from life,” according to Dario, as the organization has its roots in fine art in the classical sense.

Still, anything that stirs intrigue and brings people through the doors is worth a shot. Demonstrations, flower arranging, poetry, knitting/ crocheting, song circles, printmaking, pottery, Victorian tea, member dinners, even a paranormal research event around Halloween, always a popular time for people to notice and wonder about the Guild. Regular participants in weekly “Do Your Own Thing” sessions attend religiously.

“It’s hard to tell from the outside what happens inside,” Oporto remarked. Outdoor art projects effectively pique the interest of passersby.

Membership is not limited to artists; anyone who wants to support the activities and aims of the Guild may join. Art instruction for all ages, informative and entertaining programs and many kinds of social events are offered. And membership is a family affair, Dario explained. Artful activity is a vehicle for quality time together. “Make and Take” workshops in June, for example, are popular with parents and kids.

Generations come together at the Guild to showcase their talents. In the latest juried photography show, Dario noted, one family took home four ribbons: Meghan Booth, who shot with a GoPro, and her grandfather Rob Rielly, who used more conventional techniques.

The walls and halls of the Guild are always lined with artwork – members and guest artists, solo and group shows and special exhibits.

In order to stay current, technology upgrades, website improvements and a new social media push have gone a long way toward “dragging people into the 21st century,” as Oporto put it. The Facebook group page has almost 500 members and new ones are added weekly, apart from about 300 actual members, about 75 of which are active.

Some of the persistent challenges, though, include fostering volunteerism and attracting younger members. Volunteerism can start at just one hour a month, Dario said. It’s whatever time people have to give. And internship opportunities are available for college kids.

Of course taking care of the building is a job in itself, Oporto said. The upkeep involved in a 140-year-old house presents special problems most other arts organizations just don’t have, she added.

But from the very beginning, members have been concerned about maintaining the historic structure. Early on, they auctioned some of the items in the house but preserved the parlor. Soon, a gift shop and gallery shows flourished.

“The lovely old house has been kept ‘Victorian’ as much as is practical and retains most of its early charm,” according to the written history. “Some beautiful and typical antique furniture pieces that came with the house add to the atmosphere created by the original architect.”

Ever growing and evolving as needed, in 1998 the organization began a campaign to build an ADA-compliant addition that would honor the historic architecture. Plant sales, garden tours, bus trips, raffles, a grand art auction, and donations from members, friends and foundations helped to finance the project, which was completed in 2005.

With the expansion, the building lost its historic designation, but that was a choice the board had to weigh against the value of forging ahead. In the end, progress won out. Now the house needs an exterior facelift, and the auxiliary carriage house needs electrical work in preparation to receive a kiln donation.

Ceramics is an exciting new offering that will fill a need – “We get a lot of calls asking ‘Do you do pottery?’” Dario said. Woronczuk had visited and been inspired by Princeton Arts Council’s ceramics program, but she was quick to explain, observing how other organizations do things is more about informing a context in which to stay unique. “We don’t want to compete, we want to get along,” Woronczuk said.

And get along they do. New this year is the Island Heights Cultural and Arts Alliance, comprising the Artists Guild, the Peto House and the Cottage Museum. The Alliance is “dedicated to providing and cultivating arts and culture while preserving our architectural heritage and shared sense of place.”

The John F. Peto Studio Museum preserves and promotes the legacy of the internationally renowned trompe l’oeil artist and celebrates the history of his life, family and work. The permanent collection displays artworks, furniture and artifacts original to the house, historic photographs and more. Mission is to maintain Peto’s home and studio as a working museum, by fostering educational opportunities in the arts and partnering with the larger community.

The Jano Taber Cottage Museum or “The Cottage,” a Queen Anne carpenter gothic two-story summer cottage in the heart of town is open to the public as an accurate example of a “Living Museum,” typical of the late 1880s.

Some joint efforts of the Alliance are the Garden Tour in June and Sail Fest in September, to appeal to families.

To each member the Guild holds special meaning and precious memories.

Austin’s dad built her family’s house in Lavallette in 1945. She became a summer member of the Guild in 1983 and retired from teaching art in 1992. Upon retirement, she said, she tried working fulltime as an artist, and that lasted about two weeks. All that studio time felt lonely. At the Guild, she found a second family.

Woronczuk was drawn to the Guild after retirement because “I knew that I would find a home.” She visited the organization and fast fell in love with the people who kept it running; she saw it as a place where the arts are truly valued. “I think it’s important to have a center for the arts in the area, and I think this can be it,” she said.

Oporto agreed. “There’s just something about it that just grabs you.” She moved to the area 10 years ago from Virginia Beach and found in the Guild an instant community.

Dario started taking classes at the Guild in the ’90s and has brought her children there since they were small. She noted “a certain sentimentality about it.”

With a vigilant eye on relevance and sustainability, and with the continued love and support its devoted members pour into it day and day out, “This place will survive, I have no doubt about that.”

2019 Salute Wrap Up

By Victoria Ford

At its core, the annual Salute to Ocean County Culture and Heritage is a celebration of life and community, with the support of dignitaries and funders at the local, county and state level. It's a cooperative effort between the Ocean County Freeholders, the County Cultural and Heritage Commission, the County Parks Department and the Jay and Linda Grunin Foundation. The Salute is an awards ceremony held at Ocean County College's Grunin Center for the Arts, in conjunction with the Ocean County Teen Arts Festival, on display on the second floor.

"It's the best kind of collaboration," according to Cultural and Heritage Commission Director Tim Hart, "because it's better than any one group could do on their own."

The Salute, an outgrowth of a cultural summit convened nine years ago, has been held each year since 2012 with the goal to recognize excellence in environmentalism, tourism, art and history while nurturing nonprofit groups at the core of the county's creative economy. This year's multimedia event, held April 11, layered speeches, live performances, video vignettes, televised broadcast and online livestream, plus appearances by Freeholders Ginny Haines and Joe Vicari.

Combining the Salute with the Teen Arts Festival gives more people an opportunity to enjoy and appreciate the young artists' work, Hart explained. Each year thousands of dollars in prize money is given out to students and volunteers to advance the creative work they do to make the world a more enjoyable place to be.

As an intangible result of the Salute's longstanding success, Ocean County College is becoming an arts center for the whole state, Hart said. This year the college hosts the Poetry Out Loud state finals competition and the New Jersey Teen Arts Festival.

College President Jon Larson said OCC is extremely proud to have worked in partnership with the County Cultural and Heritage Commission and the Grunin Foundation to present the Salute and other important community events. Emphasizing his gratitude for the Grunin Foundation's philanthropy and support, Larson called it "a valuable and dynamic alliance that serves well the cultural interests of Ocean County citizens, one and all."

our civilization,’ said Ann Kahn, former president of the national PTA. ‘The moral values we treasure,’ she added, ‘are reflected in the beauty and the truth emotionally transmitted through the arts. The arts say something about us to future generations.’

“Art, culture, history and heritage are the hallmarks and the promise of a free, humane and erudite society. These are the bright lights that lead us forward. Tonight, we take the time to recognize what we gain from our engagement with the arts, culture and tradition.”

Mary Eileen Fourrat, Program Officer and Access Coordinator for the NJ State Council on the Arts, had some encouraging words about the state of the county’s creative industries, which include 1,100 arts-related nonprofit and commercial businesses, or 3.8 percent of the total number of businesses in the county.

Fourrat said arts opportunities are flourishing, and investments in the arts have added to the county’s energy and vibrancy.

The state arts council is a funder, advocate, partner and connector for the arts community, she explained; it invests more than $16 million annually in strategic support for the arts to improve quality of life in New Jersey. Of the $244,000 that goes to Ocean County this year, $88,000 of it goes to the Cultural and Heritage Commission.

Underscoring the importance of Ocean County’s $4.7 billion tourism industry, which generates 55,000 jobs, Freeholder Vicari said bringing together innovative, creative, freethinking individuals to share ideas “shapes the world.” He’s optimistic that change for the better is on the way, and he is certain that young people are the key.

In his name was given the Tourism Achievement Award, created by the Ocean County Tourism and Business Advisory Council to recognize significant achievements in the county’s number one industry. This year’s award went to Seaside Heights Mayor Anthony Vaz and Township Administrator Christopher Vaz, “for their outstanding leadership and proactive marketing efforts for Seaside Heights’ classic American boardwalk.”

In 2015 the mayor and administrator led a new strategic vision to recapture the family market and to return Seaside Heights to its former glory as the “family tourism capital of Ocean County.”

“Historian Eugene Ferguson once noted, ‘Pyramids, cathedrals and rockets exist not because of geometry, theories of structures or thermodynamics, but because they were first a picture – literally a vision – in the minds of those who built them. Society is where it is today because people had the perception, the image, the imagination, the creativity that the arts provide to make the world we know today a wonderful place to live.’

“‘The creative arts are the measure and the reflection of

“We had to get back to the family image. We had to rebrand ourselves,” Mayor Vaz said. Thanks to their efforts, today there are no empty stores on the boulevard or the boardwalk. “We had to get back to the family image. We had to rebrand ourselves,” Mayor Vaz said. Publisher, author and editor

Margaret Buchholz received the Pauline S. Miller Lifetime Achievement Award for History. She grew up on Long Beach Island, the daughter of Harvey Cedars Mayor Reynold Thomas. She published the seasonal newspaper The Beachcomber for 30 years before selling it to The SandPaper, which gave her time to research and write her nonfiction books about Jersey Shore history.

“There was no online research when I started out – fortunately I loved visiting all the local libraries and historical societies – but the availability of material makes it easier, and (the field) will continue to grow,” Buchholz said. After the 1976 bicentennial of the nation, counties and communities started looking into their own histories, she explained. “In the years since I came out with Shore Chronicles: Diaries and Travelers’ Tales from the Jersey Shore 1764-1955 (published in 1999), an anthology covering the entire coast, there has been a profusion of historical books from small communities up and down the coast. Tim Hart has been a dedicated promoter of Ocean County history and is passing this along through the generations; I am proud to be associated with him in this.”

Illustrator, fine artist and teacher Tom Rutledge of West Creek received the Lifetime Achievement Award in Arts. His biographical video, in which he talked about an injury in Vietnam that affected his arms and hands, brought the audience to tears. He overcame paralysis in his hands to learn to draw and paint again. His students praised his teaching style.

His advice to anyone endeavoring to make art: “Always try to put out your best. You’re spending some of your life, your breath, your brain power, so put out your best. Don’t just make a statement, make a profound statement.”

Elaine McConnell accepted the John C. Bartlett Jr. Government Leadership Award for having built the Ocean County Library into a multifaceted, thriving, award-winning system made of 21 locations, each of which plays a vital, integral role in its community and library users’ lives. McConnell became director in the late ’80s and took it from ordinary to extraordinary, offering progressive programs and cutting-edge technology.

“One thing I will say is that we always had fun,” she said. “We took our work seriously but not ourselves.” Sparks, the OCL mascot, is an example of some outside-the-box thinking and creativity that has made a big impact.

spirit of saving the bay is very much tied up with the old-time history of Ocean County, he said. The traditions of shellfishing, fishing and hunting defined the character of the county, and the way to keep those traditions alive is to keep the bay clean.

There to promote the New Jersey State Teen Arts Festival, coming to OCC at the end of May, was Coordinator Harrison Haney, who urged any teen interested in participating to visit njteenarts.com. The three-day festival offers 90 workshops, a college fair, master classes, 4 credits of prof dev, special guest performances, he said.

Speaking for the Ocean County Teen Arts Festival, Coordinator Jaclyn Wood said more than 1,400 students participated this year in over a dozen categories. She invited all those who were critiqued for excellence to come to the stage for a photo.

Then Kelly Fliller on behalf of the Grunin Foundation gave out monetary prizes to the top performers in documentary, visual arts, creative writing and performance: $1,000 to Lacey Township High School for the Buchholz documentary; $1,000 to a Barnegat High School student Michael Kosar for visual arts; $1,000 to Henry Traphagen of Barnegat High School for creative writing; and $1,000 to Central Regional High School for their art video titled "Human."

Two final prizes were given for performances showcased onstage that very evening: $1,000 to vocalist Max Gruber for singing a song from "Oklahoma"; and $5,000 to Point Pleasant Borough for their musical number from "Newsies."

Jim leaves the bright lights of show business behind to settle down at his farmhouse in Connecticut...but life just isn't the same without a bit of song and dance. Jim's luck takes a spectacular turn when he meets Linda, a spirited schoolteacher with talent to spare. Together they turn the farmhouse into a fabulous inn with dazzling performances to celebrate each holiday, from Thanksgiving to the Fourth of July. The fantastic Irving Berlin score includes: "Blue Skies", "Let's Start the New Year"

Aztec Two-Step: The Simon & Garfunkel Songbook

Monday, July 29 at 5:30 & 8 pm

Surflight Theatre

This fun and enlightening multimedia and music event celebrates Simon & Garfunkel's iconic contribution to Pop Culture and beyond. The music speaks for itself. The storyline of the Songbook show was originally created by the late great pioneer of progressive FM radio and author, Pete Fornatale. Now emceeing the show and featured on narration, along with creating the Songbook's slideshow, is Fornatale's protégé Tony Traguado. Laughter and nostalgia abound, and a sing-a-long is always in the mix!
