The purpose of these half-day retreats is to deepen our awareness of God's transforming presence in our lives.

The heart is God's servant, wrote St. Francis. That's easy to understand at, say, a Hallmark card level. But a heightened awareness of mind and the heart, itself, can bring a true and transforming insight: God recruits our human heart for divine purposes.

This half-day retreat explores how contemplative seekers Henri Nouwen and others came to know "heart" as an ever-available divine gift. Cynthia Bourgeault and Kabir Helminski's writings explain the Middle-Eastern tradition that sees the heart as a mystical, two-way instrument of divine perception between us and God.

July's retreat includes two 30-minute periods of centering prayer, with breaks, then a talk on the heart's role in enriching our contemplative journeys. A third, shorter centering session begins with a seated, heart-centered body prayer. There will be time for questions and a lively discussion.
