NAGMA
National Architectural Glass & Metal Association

GET TO KNOW THE LEADERSHIP TEAM

Tim Stricker

Director of Contractor Partnerships & Strategic Growth

Tim Stricker joined NAGMA in June 2026 to help build relationships with contractors across the country. No stranger to the organization, Tim was instrumental in creating NAGMA with IUPAT leadership. His entire career has been spent in the glazing industry, and he's excited by the opportunity to expose more companies and individuals to the important work NAGMA has undertaken.

"Everything I got came from the glazing industry. It's dear to my heart and something I want to give back to. And I want to raise the profile of union glaziers and contractors across the country, so our voices carry weight."

Career History

Tim began his career with the IUPAT as a glazier apprentice with District Council 21 and Local Union 252 in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1980. In 1996, he was appointed organizer for Local Union 252 and assistant political director of District Council 21. In 2006, he was appointed executive assistant to the general president at IUPAT headquarters. From 2007 through 2009, he also served as director of the IUPAT Government Affairs Department. In 2013, he became an LMCI Industry Liaison, tasked with spearheading the IUPAT Glazing Industry Initiative, a program designed to expand IUPAT glazing market share and workforce. In 2021, he was named Director of LMCI. He retired in June 2025 but remained engaged with key industry leaders. Former NAGMA Executive Director Deborah Wyandt and Tim had frequent conversations about how his network and experience could benefit the organization. After a few months of retirement, Tim was lured back to active involvement.

Objectives

Tim plans to spend the next several months outlining a plan and recommendations for growing NAGMA, building more industry support, and fostering increased involvement with legislative affairs on the local and national levels. He will travel around the U.S. and Canada to meet with contractors, introduce them to NAGMA, and expose them to the work being done with local associations. By sharing best practices and encouraging more dialogue, he hopes to help NAGMA become a leading voice in the industry.

"I hope that ultimately, when NAGMA speaks, the industry listens."

As someone who's been on both sides of the labor-management relationship, Tim understands the issues that contractors and individual union members face. He excels at finding common ground where both can be successful, and he has a track record of building positive working environments where labor and management work as true partners and everyone benefits.

Personal

Tim lives along the Jersey Shore in Wildwood, N.J., with his wife Lisa. He has three grown children, two grown stepchildren, and seven grandchildren. His latest grandson was born July 21, 2026. Tim enjoys fishing, cooking, and traveling. In his free time, he provides volunteer construction supervision at his church.