

Seaport Community Health Center in Belfast, owned and operated by Penobscot Community Health Center, kicked off its capital campaign to support construction of a new dental clinic by accepting its first major donation of $25,000 from First National Bank.

“Dental care seems to be a need across Maine. Services are dwindling in different parts of the state,” said Tony McKim, president & CEO of First National Bank. “This is a great idea for the city of Belfast and the surrounding communities.”

“When we started renovating the building for our primary care clinic, we began talking with members of the community about what they needed and rising to the top of unmet needs in this region was dental and oral health care,” said, Lori Dwyer, president & CEO of Penobscot Community Health Center.

The clinic will be on the second floor of Seaport Community Health Center. Construction is expected to begin in a few weeks with the grand opening scheduled for April of 2026.
