REVOLUTIONIZING Dementia Care

Tuesday, February 26 • 3:30 — 5:00 PM

When someone is diagnosed with dementia, the focus is typically on what he or she can no longer do. The PBS documentary Revolutionizing Dementia flips the script to show what those with dementia are capable of and how they can positively contribute to society. From the caregiver's perspective, this film, "reveals how people living with dementia can still find ways to live full and meaningful lives."

According to the ideas presented in Revolutionizing Dementia, honoring a person's remaining skills often requires finding a memory care community that practices person-centered care. By living in a setting where their individual wants and needs are considered and they are allowed to be themselves, residents feel included, rather than excluded, and their well-being improves.
