

Scott A. Winslow, Managing Partner of Nabell Winslow Wealth Management, currently serves as the Chair of the New Hanover County Cooperative Extension Advisory Council.

Through Scott's profession as a financial advisor, he works closely with individuals and small businesses helping with retirement income planning, portfolio management, tax planning and life insurance. These skills of detailed thinking and planning will serve Scott nicely as he helps lead the Advisory Council in setting its course for the upcoming year and thereafter.

Scott has a lifelong appreciation and bond with Cooperative Extension. Recalling these relationships, he states, "Growing up on an eastern North Carolina farm we had a deep and beneficial relationship with the Extension Service. Though different than what is delivered in New Hanover County we regularly benefited from the livestock agent and agricultural agent. I was involved in the County 4-H livestock judging team. The experience was instrumental in developing public speaking, leadership and critical thinking skills. I have enjoyed the lifelong friendships from Extension my entire life."

In his business suit and power tie, Scott may seem be all business and numbers, but don't let the look fool you. He tells a funny anecdote from his childhood on the farm. "Growing up on a Pasquotank County, North Carolina farm, we participated in the local 4-H livestock show. This meant raising steers, hogs and lambs for the show and sale. So even at the age of 6 or 7 I would walk up the path to the stables to water, feed and groom the animals in preparation of the upcoming event. As a mischievous young boy growing up a rural farm, suffering from boredom was not uncommon. One day my parents heard an enormously loud squealing coming from the hog stable. As they approached they could see through the opening that 7-year-old Scott was grabbing hold of the 200+ pound hog's ears and riding him like a bucking bronco. When my parents and siblings realized they had arrived at a showing of the Winslow Hog Rodeo they erupted into laughter as I fell into the deep hog manure. While being scolded I was stripped down to the bare essentials; my mother grounded me while spraying me off with a cold water hose before being allowed in our home. They would tell you he is not as serious as he looks!"

Scott has a lovely family; Shannon Brantley of Wilmington is his wife, and together they have 4 children, Colin (17), Macy (13), Avery (9) and Pierce (2). Loving sports and outdoor activities, Scott played collegiate soccer and is a huge NC State Wolfpack fan. He likes many types of music from country to classical; is happy spending time with his family or would also like to travel with his wife to the warm Caribbean. When settling in at home he enjoys reading the book of Proverbs and watching historical period movies.

When asked if he had a personal motto, Scott mentioned two things he stated at the opening of Nabell Winslow Wealth Management, both which he contributes to becoming hugely successful. "1. A burning desire in your gut to achieve; and 2. Having grit so you refuse to quit when the fire of failure hurts." With this mindset of success and attitude of determination, the Cooperative Extension is very grateful to have Scott on board in this leadership capacity.
