Moderator's Moment

Greetings to all my sisters in PW and Happy Spring. He is risen, He is risen indeed, I see him in your face!

The Coordinating Team had a great meeting in Sioux City, Iowa, this month. In cooperation with the Together in Service and Native American Concerns committees, we assembled 74 layettes for the "Welcoming the Child" organization, one of our Pine Ridge partners.

Each layette contained a blanket, two receiving blankets, a hooded towel, three wash cloths, two bibs, a hat, one outfit, two pairs of socks, two onesies, and two sleepers. A toy and a Native doll and hopefully a board book featuring a Native child and family will be added before being delivered.

There were bags upon bags of extra clothing and other items left over after we ran out of blankets and towels [one garbage bag held nothing but hats]. These will be distributed throughout our partner organizations in the Indigenous community. Wow. What a great outpouring of love to our sisters in the Dakota Presbytery.

I am so excited to go to Church Wide Gathering in August. I hope to see many of our SLAP Sisters there. Remember when registering to sign up for the Synod luncheon. You need to pay for it up front, but the Synod PW will reimburse you $30. Just send a copy of your registration form to treasurer Terri Sherman. Your Coordinating Team is planning a wonderful program for the luncheon.

Plans are moving forward for the 2025 Synod Gathering in Watertown, S.D. There will be a pre gathering event touring the Lake Traverse Reservation including the Sisseton Wahpeton College and a memorial park where the Indian Boarding School stood. We are beginning to plan workshops, so let me know if there is something you'd like to hear about.

Keep doing what you are doing, because you truly do make a difference in your communities and beyond.

God bless you all,

Louise

TOGETHER IN SERVICE-2024

By Pat McKisson, Committee Chair

'Answering the call to be the hands and feet of Christ in the World'

Together in Service, formerly known as Mission Opportunities, is one way that Presbyterian Women support mission. In addition to undertaking self-selected mission projects, we can also be "Together in Service" through financial gifts. The generous giving of Presbyterian Women to Together in Service funds mission initiatives such as health care, education, reconciliation and healing, poverty relief and more, as well as support for existing denominational and ecumenical programs.

For more than 200 years, Presbyterian women have demonstrated a commitment to serve the mission of the church in special, caring ways. From our early beginnings as missionary societies to our work with hospitals and schools, our caring has been tangible. What does it mean to support the mission of the church worldwide? For Presbyterian Women, it means that we respond to God's love for us by offering our many gifts to ensure wholeness for all. Standing alongside the Presbyterian Church \(U.S.A.\) and our ecumenical partners, we bring Christ's love to the world.

Presbyterian Women in the Congregations, Presbyteries and Synods often also identify their own mission partners, answering needs in their communities or regions. If your group would like to pursue that route, the Together in Service Guide offers guidelines for identifying and selecting a mission emphasis and forging mission partnerships. To see the Together in Service Guide, go to P.W. website at:

www.presbyterianwomen.org and click on:

What we do, then Support Mission, then Together in Service.

People of all ages seek opportunities to express their faith through service to others. Presbyterian Women groups are a great place to share concerns, discern ways to help, and act together to show God's love to the world. By partnering with organizations and responding to their needs, Presbyterian women use their creativity, enthusiasm, skills, and generosity to give to others in a hands-on way.

Presbyterian Women answer the call to be the hands and feet of Christ in the world. Whether it's by picking up knitting needles to create a blanket for a child in need or picking up a crowbar to participate in disaster recovery work, Presbyterian Women get to work when there's a need.

Presbyterian Women offer ongoing support to local church or community projects, committing to answering short-term needs in their communities, or providing goods, labor, or financial support for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission work.

What is God calling your PW group to do?

- Look around your community and prayerfully consider its needs.
- Ask mission partners how you can work together and choose projects that best match your group's interests and strengths.
- Determine if your PW group is ready to commit to ongoing support or if they prefer responding to short-term needs.
- Spread the word so that others may join you, Together in Service!

TOGETHER IN SERVICE-BABY LAYETTE KITS

By Pat McKisson, Committee Chair

Thank you for being the hands and feet of Christ in the World.

Did you go out and buy an infant baby blanket, a onesie, socks, bib, or outfit, or did you knit/crochet a baby blanket or hat, or did you contribute money to help the cause? If you did, a huge 'Thank You' is being sent your way for the tremendous response to this project.

At the P.W. of the Synod of Lakes and Prairies meeting in April, the coordinating team sorted by size and assembled approximately 67 baby layette kits for our Native American / Indigenous Persons Concerns Committee. 60 kits will be given to our sisters on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. The others, plus many extra items that were received, will be given out as needs arise.

It was such an overwhelming feeling of gratitude I had, as well as the entire coordinating team, when we saw the number of items received from you. Your love and generosity for this project exceeded all of our expectations! It is true when we say, 'together in service we can do anything.'

TOGETHER IN SERVICE-MISSION HIGHLIGHT

By Pat McKisson, Committee Chair

'Answering the call to be the hands and feet of Christ in the World.'

"Each one should use whatever gift one has received to serve others, faithfully administering God's grace in its various forms." (1 Peter 4:10)

The Together in Service Committee will highlight a mission which is embraced by the women of one of our churches in the Synod of Lakes and Prairies in each edition of the Sower. In this issue, we have chosen Rural Healthcare Initiative, a mission supported by the P.W. in the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area and specifically, First Presbyterian Church in White Bear, MN.

Alice's Story of Vision and Dedication to a Cause:

Alice Karpeh was born in Tikonko and trained as a midwife in Liberia. In 1993, at the outbreak of Sierra Leone's civil war, Alice's husband was ambushed and killed, and she was granted US asylum. Arriving with nine children, Alice made her way to Minnesota where she worked for many years as a nurse at University of Minnesota's Boynton Health Service.

As the war raged on, Tikonko was not spared. In 1998, rebels burned villages including Tikonko, destroyed farms, and murdered residents. By the time the war ended in 2002, the county's infrastructure was destroyed and over half of its people displaced.

In 2011, with the help of Minnesotans and Sierra Leonean Americans, Alice founded Rural Health Care Initiative (RHCI) as a nonprofit in Minnesota and a Nongovernmental Organization (NGO) in Sierra Leone. RHCI collaborates with the local community to advance community health and combat one of the world's highest maternal and child death rates.

Alice has retired from RHCI's Board but continues to promote awareness and fundraise. In early 2023, Alice moved back to her home in Tikonko permanently, where she will monitor RHCI's life-saving work and progress on the ground.

The Mission of Rural Health Care Initiative is to partner with rural communities in Sierra Leone to redevelop health care systems and to overcome one of the highest maternal and child mortality rates in the world.

They have accomplished so much over the past 13 years and continue to be a leader in Sierra Leone for healthcare especially in remote regions of the country. Before RHCI, pregnant women in labor walked hours-day and night, in rain and heat- to access labor and delivery facilities at the local Community Health Centers. Babies born along the way and mothers with complications didn't survive. With RHCI's Mbaomi Mother's Home and Gondama Birth Waiting Home, mothers make the trip in advance of labor and receive medical supervision, education services, nutritious food, and transportation to delivery facilities. They also provide social activities and instruction in farming and tailoring.

The statistics from their 2023 annual report are eye opening.

Since 2018, 1,218 pregnant and postpartum women have received care at the two Birth Waiting Homes.

In just the past year:

- 290 pregnant and postpartum women have been at the two Birth Waiting Homes.

- 128 pregnant and postpartum women were treated at two other remote health units we support.

- 291 ultrasound scans were performed.

Other services they provide:

- Training for over 70 Community Health Workers.

- Training for Community Health Workers for annual Helping Babies Breathe course.

- Weekly motorbike clinics that go to remote rural villages and diagnosis, treat, and dispense medication that do not have access to health care.

- Monthly donations of medical supplies and medications to health centers.

- Daily medical monitoring of pregnancy followed by postpartum and newborn care.

- Education classes on newborn care, breastfeeding, family planning and sanitation/hygiene

- Access to learning activities such as tailoring and tie-dyeing

- Transportation to return home to their rural villages with their newborn.

The motorbike clinics have been a great success. Statistics show:

- 6,555 Child medical visits.

- 820 Prenatal care visits.

- 2,858 Family planning consultations and care

--1,611 patient visits at two peripheral health units.

In a commitment to reduce disparities and reinforce local healthcare systems, in the past year, we offered:

--661 transports of women and child patients to hospital or home village

--Donated $36,961 medical supplies and equipment.

Their Children's Health Program works to protect each child against malnutrition, malaria, and other common infections.

One out of every nine children in Sierra Leone does not survive to reach the age of 5, a staggering 17 times higher than the corresponding rate in the U.S. The prevalence of malnutrition, malaria, respiratory infections, and diarrhea significantly contributes to this distressing mortality pattern. A notable 30% of children suffer from growth stunting.

Throughout the preceding year, RHCI initiatives covered:

--1,227 malnutrition visits for children.

--166 critically ill children with transportation and coverage of hospital expenses.

--57 Community Health Workers trained to support newborns and lactating mothers.

--576 infants enrolled in newborn care program.

--1,504 newborn home visits performed.

--1,191 children updated on vaccines and preventative treatments.

May the work of RHCI continue to bring positive changes in the lives of women and children in the remote regions of Sierra Leone.

Prevalence of violence against women and girls

Globally, an estimated 736 million women—almost one in three—have been subjected to physical and/or sexual intimate partner violence, non-partner sexual violence, or both at least once in their life (30 per cent of women aged 15 and older). This figure does not include sexual harassment. The rates of depression, anxiety disorders, unplanned pregnancies, sexually transmitted infections, and HIV are higher in women who have experienced violence compared to women who have not, as well as many other health problems that can last after the violence has ended.

Most violence against women is perpetrated by current or former husbands or intimate partners. More than 640 million or 26 per cent of women aged 15 and older have been subjected to intimate partner violence.

Of those who have been in a relationship, almost one in four adolescent girls aged 15–19 (24 per cent) has experienced physical and/or sexual violence from an intimate partner or husband. Sixteen per cent of young women aged 15 to 24 experienced this violence in the past 12 months [9].

Reporting of violence against women

Less than 40 per cent of the women who experience violence seek help of any sort. In the majority of countries with available data on this issue, among women who do seek help, most look to family and friends and very few look to formal institutions, such as police and health services. Fewer than 10 per cent of those seeking help reported to the police.

Climate change and violence against women and girls

Climate change and slow environmental degradation exacerbate the risks of violence against women and girls due to displacement, resource scarcity and food insecurity and disruption to service provision for survivors.

Following Hurricane Katrina in 2005, the rate of rape among women displaced to trailer parks rose 53.6 times the baseline rate in Mississippi, USA, for that year [5].

In Ethiopia there was an increase in girls sold into early marriage in exchange for livestock to help families cope with the impacts of prolonged droughts [6].

Israel/Palestine Mission Network pens letter to university leaders calling for divestment in the Holy Land

Advocacy & Social Justice May 3, 2024

Network cites General Assembly precedents on divestment

by Israel/Palestine Mission Network | Special to Presbyterian News Service

Editor's note: This letter has been lightly edited.

Dear university presidents and chancellors,

We write to you as members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a 300-year-old institution that divested from companies profiting from the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory in 2014. We encourage you to take similar measures at your university.

As the first mainline denomination to divest from companies involved in human rights abuses against Palestinians at a time when such a move was still controversial, Presbyterians were hesitant to take such a bold action. Today, with more than 34,000 dead in Gaza, it is not difficult to stand on the right side of history.

Upon selling more than $20 million of shares in Caterpillar, Motorola Solutions, and HP, the sky did not fall, and the denomination's $9 billion investment portfolio has remained strong. Divestment is a significant step toward liberation and equality in the Holy Land. It is a nonviolent and moral tool for institutions like ours and yours.

Our divestment action in 2014 followed a long history of the church selling off its investments in companies whose business practices ran counter to our values. Our denomination was active in the South African anti-apartheid movement, divesting from several companies that propped up the white supremacist government. We divested from all military-related companies in 1982, from tobacco companies in 1990, from for-profit prisons in 2014, and from five fossil fuel companies in 2022.

Divestment in each of these cases was possible because denominational leaders allowed constituents to vote on the matter. It was ordinary pastors and laypeople who, through a democratic process, called upon the church to divest, and the church responded. Now your students are calling on you for transparency and morally sound investing policies. Instead of inviting the police to assault and arrest them, we urge you to do the right thing and heed their call.

Like most churches, your universities exist not simply for the sake of making a profit but rather to, each in our own way, make the world a better place. As institutions of higher education, you cannot justify investing in companies that are complicit in the Israeli military's destruction of all twelve of Gaza's universities. As universities with some of the best medical schools in the world, you are collecting dividends from companies that profit from Israel's takeover and destruction of more than two thirds of the hospitals in Gaza. How can you educate the next generation of global citizens while the companies in your endowment aid and abet the murder of more than 34,000 people, including 15,000 children?

How can you offer classes on the Armenian genocide, the Nazi Holocaust, or the Rwandan genocide while your money is tied to a situation in Gaza that a growing number of genocide scholars considers a case of genocide?

As people of faith, we believe in a better way. It is not too late for you to change course and rid yourself of these deadly investments. Many times throughout our history, we have needed to confess our collective sins, repent for the harm that we have helped create, and choose a better path.

We invite you to join us in this ongoing process, a course that will help lead to a world where, in the words of the prophet Amos, "justice rolls down like water and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream."

Join your courageous students and please divest now.

Sincerely,

Israel/Palestine Mission Network of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Dispatch from Forbearance Presbyterian Church

Outside the Box

BY CHARLOTTE JOHNSTONE

Forbearance's Presbyterian Women organization had become stuck—tires spinning, engine sputtering, a few people pushing, some pulling back—an enterprise with crossed purposes, going nowhere fast. On the one hand, PW had always been an integral part of the church, overseeing many aspects of congregational life that otherwise would have been neglected. And yet, on the other hand, certain aspects of Forbearance's PW had somehow become preserved in amber—fossilized remnants of an earlier era that remained unexamined and unchallenged. Good intentions abounded, but tradition and organizational inertia usually triumphed. Radical surgery was needed, but no one seemed willing to make the first cut. To be blunt, PW was in danger of becoming the sole province of the church's older women—monthly luncheon meetings recycling old business, the occasional craft project, committee reports and dutiful prayers. The one topic never on the official agenda, however, was the question habitually and somewhat resentfully asked during the luncheon conversation—"Where are all the younger women?"

Catherine Latson

"Oh, they don't care about church like we do" was often heard. "They're too busy" . . . "They can't be bothered" . . . "What we do doesn't seem to interest them" were murmurs heard around the tables with varying degrees of annoyance and resignation. There was a problem, all acknowledged, but the pursuit of a solution seemed so fraught with challenges to the existing PW hierarchy and the entrenched organizational egos that most of the women chose to preserve the status quo.

One woman, however, growing tired of the same old whine, decided to do something about it. Marge Paley, an elder and a PW fixture, "interviewed" many of the younger women of Forbearance, but she did it with a twist. Instead of asking the usual unproductive and defensive question—"Why don't you come to PW meetings?"—she asked a question designed to lead to progress: "If you could create a women's organization within Forbearance, one that would engage your interest, what would it look like?" And this is some of what she heard . . .

"I'm a teacher and I have three kids of my own, so my time is limited for long-term commitments. I'd like to see an organization that allowed me to dip in and out without feeling guilty about not attending every meeting—some sort of structure where I could get involved to accomplish a defined task in a specific time frame."

"The one time I went to a PW meeting, no one talked to me. I introduced myself to the women around me, but they didn't seem much interested. I was relatively new to Forbearance and thought this might be a place where I could connect, but it just seemed to be a group that had a few women who ran things, with a lot of women who just listened. I asked about opportunities for involvement, but no one got back to me, so I figured this was an organization that didn't need me. I guess if I were running things there, I would make sure that new people got not only an enthusiastic welcome, but also a chance to get immediately involved."

"Well, the first thing I'd do is make sure we understood the differences between Forbearance's generations. My mother's generation, I think, is more loyal to institutions and traditions, perhaps more conservative about wholesale change, while my generation and my children's generation tend to be skeptical, entrepreneurial, comfortable with rapid change, less likely to be loyal to an institution and more likely to be loyal to a cause. None of these generations are wholly right or wrong, but if we're going to work together, we need to embrace the differences and learn from each other. We all work hard and we're all productive, but if a church group wants to attract younger women, connect them to a pragmatic goal, show them where and why they're needed, welcome challenges to the existing order and jettison any hint of turf protection."

"I'd have a PW executive committee made up of only a moderator to oversee the whole thing, a treasurer to manage the money, a project manager and two project advisory members. Instead of monthly meetings, the women of Forbearance would be offered a variety of six-week project opportunities in which to participate and each project would determine its own leadership. Forbearance's women—and men—could participate in as few or as many of the projects as their schedules permitted. What would the projects be? Well, they could include projects directed to the needs of the larger community, an evening book group, a breakfast Bible study, PW fund-raising initiatives, a series of theologically relevant movie nights with discussion, a babysitting co-op, planning for a working trip to a foreign mission, a biography project to gather the life stories of Forbearance members, a PW investment group, a project to arrange for four yearly evening seminars with provocative speakers, a resale shop, partnership with a homeless shelter . . . there are numerous possibilities. Then, once a year, I would have the project participants meet for dinner at the church to assess their projects and to recommend new initiatives—or continuation of successful ones—to the executive committee. The advantages would include diverse leadership within each project, manageable time commitments of definite duration, irrelevance of age or gender, friendships formed through mutual pursuits, easy access to the life of the church for new members. My PW organization would be less interested in preserving its traditional self and more interested in being a catalyst, a seedbed."

As Marge eventually told the PW board, "If we want the younger women of Forbearance to take more of an interest in what PW has to offer, we need to think like the younger women of Forbearance. They are multitaskers, have limited free time, value innovation, don't shy away from conflict, are involved with issues that go far beyond this community. They value leadership that is bold and imaginative, able to reinvent itself. They do not say, 'But we've always done it that way.' They say, 'Think outside the box or be left behind.' They have ideas that need to be heard. They are pragmatic and task-oriented, they are connected to dynamic and cutting-edge ideas, and they enjoy friendships with all sorts of people. Monthly luncheons with polite conversation and static agendas feel like spinning wheels to them, but a project-based PW program with definable goals—projects that would involve all ages, more equality of leadership and a changing cast of participants—would be, from what I heard, more likely to attract their attention. I like their ideas and I like their energy, and I think we ought to follow their lead and reinvent ourselves."

Marge got, as one might expect, a mixed reception. A few women, entrenched in Forbearance's leadership, were vaguely offended and discomfited, perhaps hostile to the idea that younger women, who had previously spurned PW involvement, should have any influence at all on their organization. But others, perhaps just enough, recognized the possibilities and began to advocate for change.

It's a start, Marge thought. And who knows what might result from the debate? A leaner, more dynamic, bolder and more diverse organization that values the past but embraces the future? A group of Presbyterian women reinventing themselves to meet the challenges of a new age? Yes indeed, thought Marge, it's a definite start. 🍷

PRESBYTERIAN WOMEN ARE BOLD – AROUND THE WORLD

CELEBRATING A BOLD PW

Available at youtube.com/presbyterianwomen/videos (PW’s YouTube channel), the video debuted at the 225th General Assembly (2022) and is an excellent tool for showing why Presbyterian Women matters. Share a link for the video in your next personal email, church newsletter or minute for mission. Use it as a tool to raise awareness about and invite others to participate in our life-changing organization.
