The Tampa Bay Business Journal has named the 2022 Power 100, a guide to the region’s most influential business leaders.

The list is presented alphabetically below. Profiles will be published both online and in the weekly edition in early March.

The Power 100 is not a ranking, but rather a guide that aims to reflect who are the most influential businesspeople in Tampa Bay at this moment in time. The editorial staff and publisher of the Business Journal selected those who made the list.

Narrowing it down wasn't easy or quick. We considered many individuals from across Tampa Bay and spent hours debating and crafting the list. The team assessed leadership qualities and whether, visibly or quietly, through philanthropic or institutional means, a candidate shapes the path and fortunes of the regional business community beyond their own bubble.

Doing business during an ongoing global pandemic has forced change, adaptation, accelerated failure and success. While the current conditions framed how we considered the 2022 honorees, the recognition represents a cumulative impact and staying power. Power by nature doesn't change quickly. There will be familiar names.

That said, there are 23 newcomers to the list in 2022, a sign that the wider Tampa Bay business community continues to evolve.

An important note: The list does not include elected officials because, by the nature of their office, it can be assumed they are influential. We also limited the list to those who currently reside in the Tampa Bay region. You will also see some pairs and families on this list.

While the 2022 Power 100 is complete, there are many people who are playing significant roles, and many more will undoubtedly emerge for Power 100 consideration in the coming year.

This is an annual undertaking. If you have anyone you'd like to suggest, please email me at amuellner@bizjournals.com.
