

Chris Malins has served as Vice President for Finance & Business Affairs and Chief Financial Officer of Seattle University since summer of 2023. In this role, he oversees the finance and facilities areas of the University, including the Budget, Treasury, Controller and Capital Projects areas.

Previously, he served for over three decades as the University of Washington, most recently as Associate Vice President for Treasury. He was responsible for Asset Liability Management, Treasury and Banking Operations, Investor Relations, and Financial Forecasting in that role.

These units manage the University's debt portfolio, operations and accounting for debt, endowment, operating funds, institutional proformas, student outreach, and engagement in socially responsible investing.

Mr. Malins also held positions in grant and student accounting before moving to the Treasury office in 1999. He holds a degree in finance from the University of Washington with an additional concentration in accounting. He is a CPA (inactive).

Mr. Malins has served on many Boards over his career and is currently Board chair for the Treasury Institute for Higher Education.