Which Sod Fits Your Yard?

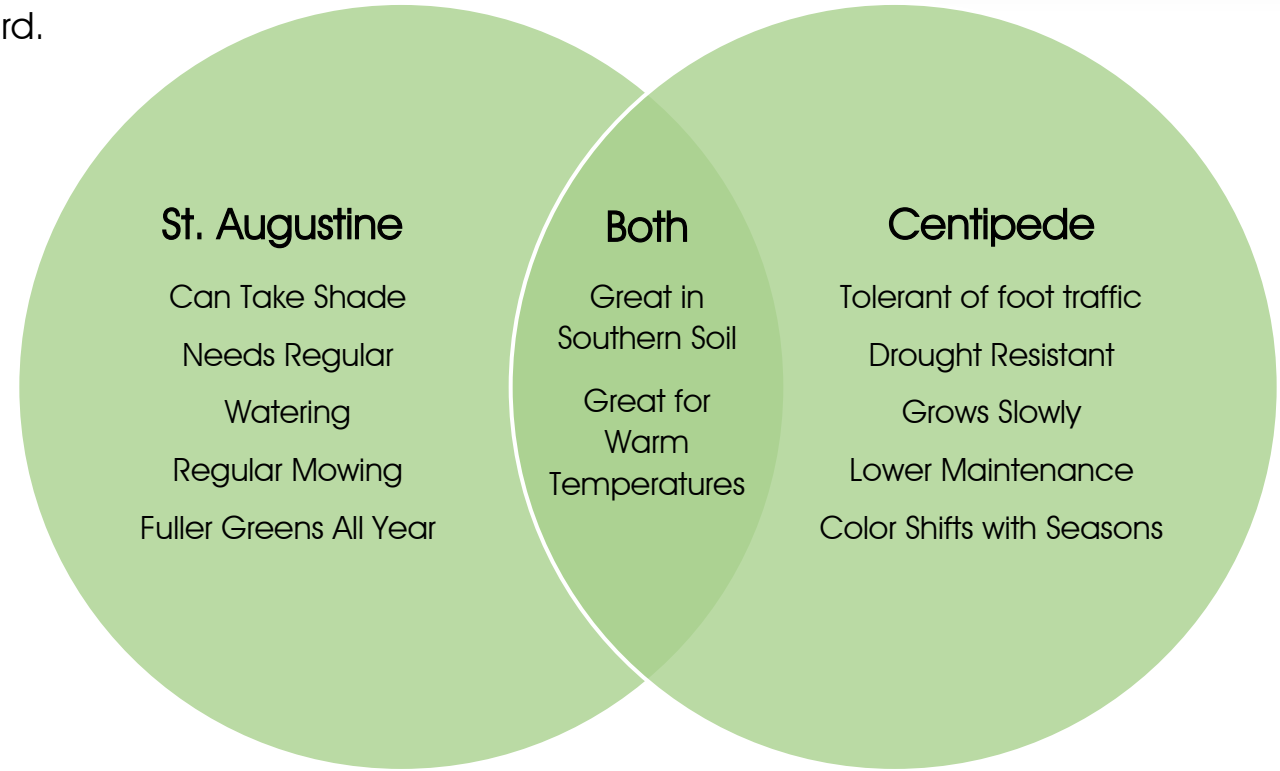

Every Thursday at our three locations there is a rush to grab as much sod as possible, but a lot of people don't know the difference between our two varieties.

Centipede (picture to the left) is perfect for the high traffic areas of your yard! It is the hardiest of the two varieties and can take much more sun than St. Augustine. This hardiness means less time spent watering the grass and mowing the lawn, as it grows relatively slowly. Centipede sprouts are bright green but as temperatures cool you should see some brown coloration (this is most noticeable in the fall). Centipede is the lower maintenance variety I suggest for full sun areas.

St. Augustine (picture to the right) offers vibrant green lawn coverage with thick blades that keep their color for longer in the season. It can take shade extremely well and still look great. It needs more watering and mowing because they grow a bit quicker and fuller than Centipede. If the sod is the same price, this is my personal preference. St. Augustine is more demanding of time and attention, but the look really pays off. The only time I would suggest against St. Augustine is very dry or drought-prone spots in your yard.
