Hallie M. Fausey

ARCS Chapter Scholar 2023-2024

Ph.D. Student in Physics

B.S. in Physics & B.S. in Applied Mathematics, The University of Delaware

MPhil Physics, The George Washington University

Hallie M. Fausey is a first-year Ph.D. candidate at the George Washington University. Hallie researches gamma-ray bursts, the most energetic stellar explosions in the universe. Using observational data from some of the largest telescopes on the earth, her research examines the history of the universe and investigates the environments of the first galaxies and stars that created material of which we are made, giving us an opportunity to learn more about where we come from.
