Winchester-based Trex Co. Inc., which manufactures wood-alternative decking, railing and outdoor living products, has been named to Time magazine's "America's Best Companies 2026" list.

According to a media release from Trex, thousands of U.S. companies were evaluated by Time and research partner Statista to determine overall employee satisfaction, financial performance and sustainability. The 1,000 highest-scoring companies were then recognized as "America's Best Companies 2026."

Trex entered the list at No. 830.

"This recognition is especially meaningful as Trex celebrates its 30th anniversary," Adam Zambanini, president and CEO of Trex, said in the release. "For three decades, we've focused on creating long-term value for our customers, channel partners, employees, shareholders and communities. Being recognized by Time reflects the dedication of our team, the strength of our culture and our commitment to innovation, operational excellence and responsible business practices."

Trex [NYSE:TREX], which sells its products through more than 6,700 retail locations across six continents, was the only decking brand to be included in this year's list.

In addition to making the "America's Best Companies 2026" list, Trex was included in Newsweek magazine's list of the "Most Trustworthy Companies in America 2026." USA Today also included Trex on its 2026 list of "America's Climate Leaders." For more information, visit trex.com.
