GENERATION O

The National Organization for Opioid-Exposed Children

Drug-endangered children often begin life with exposure in the womb. Since the start of the opioid epidemic, over 500,000 children have been born with prenatal opioid exposure. These children, often overlooked, are known as Generation O.

A national nonprofit bearing their name, Generation O: The National Organization for Opioid-Exposed Children, is stepping up to ensure they are seen, supported, and understood.

Generation O's mission is to provide unwavering support to individuals, families, and communities affected by prenatal opioid and substance exposure—throughout childhood and beyond.

On this call, we will explore the journey from the womb, through birth, and into childhood and highlight the lasting impacts of opioid and polysubstance exposure at every stage of development, as well as the interventions that can help them thrive.
