

Private Credit: A Different Kind of Lending

November 7, 2024 The Kingsley Bloomfield Hills

Private credit generally refers to non-bank lending that is neither issued nor traded in public markets. It encompasses a broad range of debt strategies including direct lending, mezzanine debt, distressed debt, working capital, special situations, real estate debt, and infrastructure debt.

During our panel discussion, five industry experts will discuss the private credit market, its uses, recent trends, and the pros and cons of private credit for all stakeholders involved --- borrower, lender, and sponsor. The panel will explain how the private credit market is ever-changing, and, as more private credit lenders emerge, how the market will continue to evolve.
