Deer Ridge

In Central Oregon, autumn's arrival is both a welcome reprieve from the heat of the summer and the early sign that winter is right around the corner. It's an odd time when many of us here desperately try to hold on to some semblance of summer while our loved ones are across the room doing a snow dance. We're seasonally conflicted.

The Blue Mountains take their name from the bluish haze that usually hangs across the rugged, high peaks. This range is in central Oregon.

Oregon grows around 2600 acres of pumpkins on just over 400 farms.[1] Most of those acres are in Benton, Lane, Marion, and Multnomah counties. In 2018, Oregon's pumpkins were worth 9.8 million dollars. Oregon is in the top 15 states in the country for pumpkin production. They are not one of the top crops in the state, but they are still important. Pumpkin patches in Central Oregon benefit from our desert climate and still get plenty of sunshine, even in late October. While smaller family farms all around the region will sometimes host fall events, the two most popular pumpkin patches both reside in Terrebonne: Smith Rock Pumpkin Patch and the DD Ranch Pumpkin Patch. Pumpkins come in many different shapes, sizes, and colors. They can range from a quarter of a pound all the way up to a couple thousand pounds. Some pumpkins are meant to be eaten, while others are decorative. They can be orange, white, green, and more.

Fun Facts About Pumpkins!

There are more than 45 varieties of pumpkins, Pumpkins are 90% Water, they are grown on every continent except Antarctica, Illinois grows more pumpkins than any other state in the country.

Oregon's largest Pumpkin to date on Saturday, Daletas broke the all time record, harvesting a pale pumpkin weighing in at 2,157.5 pounds.
