Dear Parents,

February is over and with it the excitement of Valentine's Day and Dr. Seuss week. But the fun and learning is not over yet! I Thank you in advance for having your child at school by 8:20 ready to learn, I thank you for communicating with me when in need and for supporting your child's learning at home.

During this week the students practiced capitalizing proper nouns, using quotation marks for titles of books, synonyms, and syllables. The students learned what the genre, biography, and autobiography, meant. They read the biography of Cesar Chavez and Theodor Seuss Geisel. The children read and wrote about "Horton Hears A Who". They cut and pasted adjectives to describe the main character and the supportive characters.

Chapter Seven's pace is fast and it is a short one as well. We will probably (if everything goes as planned) finish this chapter next week; therefore, the students will be tested the following week. This chapter is all about money and telling time.

We started a new chapter in Science, the students took their science small book to help them support what they are learning in class, please make sure that your child reads to you and discusses the information learned.

A new lesson will be introduced for Social Studies, after the children learn about some "Super African American Heroes" we move on to discuss "Citizens and Government" in our country.

Listening to the children sing during music with Mrs. Michelle is just a delight! They sing acappella and it sounds just perfect! They have learned so much this year!

Part of their healthy growth and development includes their Physical Education class where they not only learn new fun games with Mrs. Jackie, but they also learn how to have patience, how to take turns, how to be part of a team knowing that winning and losing is part of the game; but most importantly they learn to regulate their emotions!

COMING UP...

In-house field trip

Have a lovely weekend!

Love,

Mrs. Audrey
