In the eighties and
nineties the
LWV
achieved the passing of the Voting Rights Act,
the Nuclear
Forces Treaty, and the National
Voter
Registration
Act, known as the “motor
voter” bill.

In the sixties the LWV began the work of building a solid foundation of support for equal access to education and employment and by the early seventies began efforts to achieve a National Equal Rights Amendment. In 1976 the League hosted the first televised presidential debate since 1960 and won an Emmy for Outstanding Achievement in Broadcast Journalism.

In the 2000s the League helped to enact the Help America Vote Act of 2002, the Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Act of 2002, and renew the Voting Rights Act. They filed a number of amicus briefs relating to campaign finance reform issues, racial bias in jury selection and Title IX. In 2011, the League opposed measures that restricted access to voting, particularly those that affected minorities, the elderly, students, and rural voters. In 2017 the League filed an amicus brief to the Supreme Court arguing that gerrymandering violates the First Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause of the U.S. Constitution.

The first president of the Glen Ellyn League of Women Voters, Adade Wheeler (pronounced Aida Dee), was known as the 'White Tornado' because of her premature white hair and her tireless advocacy. She taught history at Jackson Middle School. During her tenure there, she continued her commitment to the League's mission of promoting active citizenship by publishing Congress-Student Style a curriculum designed as a simulation that required students to form a legislature, study bills, debate controversial issues and hold elections.

Earning over 60 credits at over 10 different universities, Adade went on to teach at Wheaton North High School and adjunct at five different colleges before becoming one of the first faculty members at COD. As a history instructor, she immediately developed a course entitled Women in American Society. She organized the Citizens' Advisory Committee on Women's Programs and along with Doris Voelz, director of Continuing Education for Women (CEW), secured funding to establish a Women's Center designed to "serve as a clearinghouse and information center on programs of interest to women." Adade devoted her life to improving the lives of women through education and advocacy.
