Diana Raab

Create a Revolution

ncite change,
ook for a patch
f difficulty amongst the glistening clouds, unt for a need unmet, r a journey you want to take.

Stretch your arms to the sky's glow, ind peace within yourself offer a donut to the homeless, ap into the closet never opened nd pull down old journals written before wrinkled foreheads nd children expanding like piders crafting their webs.

Sink your teeth into good books write the author to share your enthusiasm for their warm words which make your heart twitch and your muscles flex upon the seat which holds the oldest bones n your family all gone, as you sit in your senior position in the same way you were once the youngest and most boisterous of the group.

Teach the world how life circles and how change never really occurs it just begs for a new sunlight.

Let yourself go be the one who they all talk about when you are gone.