Disability Rights are Civil Rights

Guest Lecturer: Paul Grossman, JD

Paul has been a civil rights lawyer in the field of education for nearly 50 years, participating in the development and growth of civil rights protections from race to national origin, to disability, to sex and sexual orientation. For the U.S. Department of Education, Office for Civil Rights (OCR), while its Chief Civil Rights Attorney in Washington DC and San Francisco, Paul addressed school segregation in the South; discrimination against "language minority" students including those attending the Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles public schools; discrimination against female athletes in higher education; and discrimination against students with disabilities at every level of education. He taught disability law at the UC College of the Law, San Francisco for over 20 years. Paul provides legal guidance to several universities including the Chancellor's Office of the California Community College System and the UC Office of the President.
