

Advanced Journalism and Media

The Advanced Journalism and Media class had an editorial meeting last week to brainstorm how to better publicize and update our student publication, The Hook. Students are beginning by editing stories turned in by the Introduction to Journalism classes. After editing, students will conference with the authors and prepare the stories for publication on our website.

In the coming class periods, the Advanced Journalism and Media students will lead the editorial meeting for the Introduction to Journalism class, coaching them through issue planning and establishing their roles as editors of The Hook. This will prepare them to lead the creation of our winter print issue of The Hook.

We are also in the process of scheduling some field experiences for the students that we hope will include observing the creation of a news program and riding along as a news story is created.