I AM LUCKY ST. PATRICK'S DAY CRAFTIVITY

A fun St. Patrick's Day I Am Lucky Craftivity that helps students reflect on what makes them lucky. The St. Patrick's Day Craftivity includes the clover base and a prewriting graphic organizer for students to brainstorm ideas on why they are "lucky".

Like my other craftivities and flap books, I love building students' ability to consider the world around them in new ways, especially around holidays. Each of my craftivities allows students to turn inward for a bit of time. They make great growth mindset activities.

WHAT MAKES YOU "LUCKY" – THE POWER OF REFLECTION ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY

I love this I am Lucky St. Patrick's Day Craftivity because, like my Valentine's Day and Spring Craftivities, it helps students reflect on who they are as person and value what they have around them. So often, our kiddos don't spend time thinking about what makes them a good person and appreciating the good things in their life. This craftivity helps them do just that.

In this activity, students create a four-leaf clover. On each leaf, students write something that makes them lucky. You could also come at it from the perspective of something they're thankful for or appreciate.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY CRAFTIVITY GRAPHIC ORGANIZER & PREWRITING CHART

The I am Lucky Craftivity includes a prewriting chart or recording sheet for your learners. I generally create an anchor chart with students that matches the graphic organizer. We brainstorm things that whatihavelearnedteaching.com make students lucky, things they have, can do, and things they are. We generate these ideas as a whole class.

Students then take the graphic organizer back to their seats and create their own list of reasons they themselves are lucky. After completing the graphic organizer, I give students the base of the clover, which is the stem and leaves without the flaps. Once students have written their sentences and colored their base, I give them the leaves to color, cut and glue on.

Younger kiddos will find it helpful to have some of the sentence structure in place when writing how they are lucky.
