Jennifer Ward Joins Orange County Business Council as Senior Vice President of Advocacy and Government Affairs

IRVINE, CA— Orange County Business Council is pleased to welcome Jennifer Ward as Senior Vice President of Advocacy and Government Affairs, beginning July 13. Working closely with President and CEO Lucy Dunn, as well as OCBC's communications and investor relations teams, she will oversee all aspects of the Council's government and public affairs programs at a critical time for Orange County's business community.

Ward joins OCBC from Clean Power Alliance, the nation's largest community choice energy provider, where she spent two years on the start-up team and served as Director of External Affairs. She is a senior level political and public affairs strategist with extensive work collaborating with local leaders across Southern California.

"Jennifer is a terrific addition to OCBC's team and brings with her over 10 years of experience in government relations, regional planning, and community outreach," said Lucy Dunn, OCBC President and CEO. "I'm confident that her regional expertise and leadership will prove invaluable for OCBC's advocacy and government affairs initiatives."

Prior to her tenure with Clean Power Alliance, Ward served as Director of Government Relations for the Western Riverside Council of Governments (WRCOG) where she led engagement with policymakers, business and academic leaders, and community stakeholders to tackle a variety of issues for the region's future, including economic and workforce development, transportation, sustainability, and public health.

"The strength, innovation, and leadership exemplified by Orange County's business community is important now more than ever. I am delighted to join OCBC's team championing critical issues locally, in Sacramento, and in D.C. that will best position our region for continued success."

Ward holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in Environmental Analysis, Society Development and Policy from Claremont McKenna College.
