Call for Submissions: Refereed Flash Session

The CCF 2018 Program Committee is organizing a Flash Session as part of the 2018 Annual Conference. The Flash Session will be held in the main meeting room and will use a mini-session format: Four presenters will speak for five minutes each, followed by a moderated Q&A. The speakers have the use of Powerpoint, but are allowed to use no more than five slides. Flash session paper titles with authors' names and affiliations will be listed in the program. We are especially interested in highlighting the research of graduate students and junior scholars but submissions are open to all.

Those interested in presenting as part of a Flash Session must submit a 200 word abstract via email to Rachel Donnelly at redonnelly@utexas.edu by January 19, 2018. Participants will be notified no later than January 31st. Conference details including hotel information can be found at: <https://contemporaryfamilies.org/2018-ccf-conference/>

Announcing the Pamela Smock Award

Council on Contemporary Families member Pamela Smock has donated a biennial award for travel to a CCF conference for an early career scholar to present work broadly related to the conference theme. This Pamela Smock Award is open to graduate students, and scholars up to five years after the terminal degree. The criterion for the award includes both the quality of the work presented, broadly defined fit with the conference theme, and a documented interest to bringing research expertise beyond the academy by becoming an active member of CCF. The Award will cover travel expenses and hotel expenses up to $1,000.

To apply for the Pamela Smock Award, send a copy of your CV and a statement about your interest in becoming active in the Council on Contemporary Families to redonnelly@utexas.edu by January 19, 2018.
