

Robbie is a British-born Israeli writer, educator, and performer living on a hill in the Galilee.

He is co-author of “Stories for the Sake of Argument” with Abi Dauber Sterne, and co-director of For the Sake of Argument, that encourages meaningful learning by harnessing the energy and passion of healthy arguments. We develop and distribute the materials, the tools, and the training to enable healthy arguments in the home, workplace, school and campus in North America and in Israel.

Previously Robbie spent 10 years in Makom, the Israel Education unit of the Jewish Agency. He coined the phrase “Hugging and Wrestling with Israel”, created and continues to drive the 4HQ System of Israel Education, and consults and teaches internationally on Israel Education.

Robbie has also worked in professional theater for over 30 years. In 1991 he co-founded his own physical story theater company called Besht Tellers – performing on London’s West End and throughout the world. Since making aliya, he has taught at Israel’s main theater schools, directed several plays, and his self-written solo shows perform throughout the world in English, Hebrew, and Spanish.

He’s married to Dorit, a magical stained-glass artist, and they have two kids.
