

Bio: Stacey Bryden, M.S., CCC-SLP, is a speech-language pathologist with over 20 years of experience providing home-based early intervention services to young children and their families across Los Angeles. As both a practicing clinician and professional educator, Stacey brings a unique perspective that bridges evidence-based practices with the everyday realities and complexities of working alongside families in their natural environments. She is the founder of Chatter House Speech Therapy and Coach2Coach, a professional learning community established in 2020 that has reached thousands of early intervention providers across the globe. Formally trained in Family Guided Routines Based Intervention (FGRBI) by her mentor, Dr. Juliann Woods, Stacey is passionate about translating research into practical, meaningful strategies that build caregiver confidence and competence within everyday routines.

She is a graduate of the USC/Children's Hospital Los Angeles LEND Fellowship and an experienced university lecturer, mentor, and guest speaker. Through professional development, reflective practice, and collaborative learning, Stacey supports early intervention professionals to strengthen their caregiver coaching skills by providing individualized, culturally responsive, and neurodiversity-affirming services to families.
