

What would it mean if burnout among our colleagues were reduced by 50% in the next 12 months?

- Fewer medical mistakes
- Improved patient satisfaction
- We could prevent future burnout by understand the cause
- Physicians would become more involved in other activities, perhaps in advocacy or community involvement
- With less primary care burn out, perhaps more medical students would choose that specialty
- More people choosing medicine as a profession
- More general engagement by physicians
- EHRs would be more integrated and functional
- Have a better pool of mentors and expertise
- Better retention of physician workforce
- Healthier society
- Happier physicians
- Teams of providers would work better together and improve health and health care
- Improved patient outcomes
- Lower physician self treatment – perhaps decreasing substance abuse
- Improve relationships with other stakeholders